ORANGE LADIES' TEA SUCCESSFUL

The Orange Ladies' tea and sale held yesterday afternoon in the Civic Centre was quite successful in spite of the unfortunate all-day-long April shower.

Patrons of the affair found that the articles offered for sale were of a very high quality and the tea hour passed pleasantly.

Conveners of committees were Mrs. Frank Ellison, general convener; Mrs. J. Johansen, Mrs. C. McIntyre and Mrs. J. R. Carr, fancywork; Mrs. W. H. Hill and Mrs. Wm. Way, home-cooking; Mrs. H. Killin, drawings; Mrs. Louis Wide, cashier.

Catering and serving were Mrs. Ray Bean, Mrs. George Geddes jr., Mrs. Wm. Field, Mrs. Armand Lund, Mrs. Jack Wide and Mrs. W. J. Richards.

Mrs. J. P. Moller, Worthy Mistress of the Orange Ladies, received the callers.

The little Misses Sandra Bean and Aileen Howe drew the lucky numbers for the prizes. Winners were: Mrs. A. Christensen, Digby Island, a chicken, ticket No. 100; Mrs. Geo. Rudderham, whipping cream, No. 204; Alice Denton, box of home-made candy, No. 30; F. Ellison, pillow slips, No. 29.

LIFE in this Prince Rupert

by BIDDEE JINKS

It happened in a doctor's outer office where I and several others each waited for the nurse to appear and turn her eyes in her direction. The door opened and closed, and our group number increased by two.

It was a woman and her daughter, the latter about 14 years of age. They stood uncertainly together for a moment, then took seats on opposite sides of the office, expressionlessly facing each other . . the mother was two chairs to my left; the chair between us holding my knitting and handbag. Lifting them immediately, I said, "Perhaps your daughter would like to sit with you."

She smiled a toothless smile. "Oh, she's alright"—but without hesitation, moved into the now vacant chair herself. Suddenly she reached a forefinger to touch a strand of red wool. "Ain't it nice to be able to knit," she said, "ain't it tho!"

"Do you knit?"

"Land, no. Ain't never had time to learn, and now my fingers are too thick I guess." She said it placidly, but then I noticed her hands. Large hands, rough and calloused. Having passed beyond the reddened stage, they were dark, and the fingers were blunt from broken nails.

They were not unlike her face, which also was darkened and seamed, showing the penalty of unbroken toil abetted by poverty. Yet both were kind; simply kind, knowing no guile. "Better pull your stockings, honey," she said gently across the office, and unabashedly, her daughter 'pulled' them. First one and then the other, heavy cotton, held above the knee with a circlet of white elastic. "That's better," remarked her mother, and gave her full attention to the marvel at hand. "Ain't it wonderful to knit," she said again. "To make somethin's so purty out of one straight string of wool."

While I pondered the truth of her last remark, she spoke again. "Aain't you lucky down here. No snow—and it's purty here, ain't it?"

"You live out of town then?" I asked, and on the moment shockingly observed that this careworn lady was little older than myself.

"Yes. Out beyond Francois Lake. There's sure lots of snow up there yet. Have you ever been up?" When I had not, she urged it upon me. She would be 'awful glad to see ya if ya' did' Just then the nurse beckoned and I saw her no more.

But I have not forgotten. In spite of the casual, "Purty, ain't it?" I knew that coming to Prince Rupert was an event. That in her world of realism, and stark necessity, there was not a vocabularly that might clothe beautifully, or attempt to express her thoughts. The train trip was as exciting as the first merry-go-round to a four-year old. And she did come by train.

As Rupert becomes more and more firmly embedded upon the map, a larger number of visitors will come to the city. Whether they arrive by boat, train or by highway, it is important that they think the city, and its surrounding, 'purty'—which brings to mind a certain spot just beyond the city limits, on the highway, which could in non wise be labelled thus. Apart from being an eyesore, an incinerator and dump-ground, does not sweeten the air no matter how bright the day or charming the vale in which it lies.

Motor-tourists must pass this spot, and enter the city with an impression dependent upon how sensitive are some of their five senses. And others wishing to visit Miller Bay or Port Edward must brave it twice. Many of our own citizens must face it daily. In the winter it is bad enough, they say—but summer is upon us.
