TOMATO JUICE SALES ZOOM

HAMILTON, Ont. (C) — The Canadian palate is demanding an unprecedented quota of tomato juice these days—more than three times the pre-war average yearly consumption.

Records show that as recently as 1930 only 7,000 cases of tomato juice were packed in the Dominion. By 1939 the yearly average had grown to 1,300,000 cases. The 1946 pack, according to Canadian manufacturers' estimates, hit a record of more than 4,000,000 cases. With increased acreage planned for 1947 (and with the blessing of good weather and adequate supplies of labor and materials) the yield and total canning pack may reach new heights.

Tomatoes were first introduced as a palatable and "non-poisonous" food about a century ago. Prior to that time they were considered fit only for a witch's brew; the French once prescribed them as an effective love potion. A woman in Trenton, N.J., born in 1833, recalled that when as a child she ate a tomato, her parents rushed her to a doctor, certain she would die.

It was not until 1928 that tomato juice started to become popular—result of the enterprise of a Chicago hotel man who introduced it in the form of spiced juice cocktails. Almost overnight its popularity became nation-wide in the United States. Canadian production began to climb simultaneously and by 1936 it had reached the 1,500,000 case mark.

Although the canning of whole tomatoes has shown a decline in volume in recent years (an estimated 1,750,000 cases in 1946 compared to 3,500,000 in 1937) the combined packs of whole tomatoes and juice in Canada last year were enough to provide 12 tins for every man, woman and child in the country.
