Louise Bearspaw Was Noted Hunter

Widow of Stony Indian Chief Is Dead at 104

HIGH RIVER, Atala. (CP) — Louise Bearpaw, 104, who once roped buffalo calves is dead. She was the widow of the late Chief Moses Bearspaw of the Stony Indians.

News of her death was conveyed in a letter written by her grandson, King Bearspaw, who braved many miles of snow-blocked trails to reach the post office at Pekisko near where the Duke of Windsor's ranch is situated.

Her early life was spent around Fort Edmonton, near Edmonton, and Rocky Mountain House, 100 miles southwest of Edmonton, and she used to recall the Red River jig dancing at the lodges in those days.

The aged woman had many stories of buffalo hunting and of her own skill in the hunt. She told of how she had thrown her raw-hide loop over husky buffalo calves and then finished them off with her little axe.

Many traditions of the tribe were handed down in tales told by Louise to her five sons and five daughters, 23 grandchildren, 56 great-grandchildren and 15 great-great-granchildren.

No one knows why an Indian should have been called Louise —particularly as she was born and brought up on the prairies long before any white woman set foot on them—but it was as "Louise" that she has always been known in her tribe.

DEBATE WITH CHURCHILL —Abraham B. Rogow, 66-year old Bayonne, N.J. carpenter, who "didn't get a fumble" from Winston Churchill when he challenged him to a debate but was assured of a chance to tangle with the former Prime Minister's son on "The Merits of the British Empire." Rogow issued his invitation to Randolph Churchill following a heated discussion between Churchill and an erudite Denver plumber earlier in the week on the British Empire. Young Churchill wired Rogow "he would be delighted to take up the challenge" when he arrived in the east some time in April. The Russian-born carpenter revealed that he had never been to England but had studied the history of that country for over 20 years.

FINDS COYOTES GOOD TARGETS

Animals Pay Dividends At Ten Dollars a Pelt

REGINA (CP)—Canada's pioneer air hunter is an American.

He is George Sands, 46-year-old Havre, Mont., rancher who has harried prairie coyotes for the last three winters and practically single-handed decimated the wolves of his own state in the five years before that from his single-engine plane.

Sands is air-gunning these days along with one of his ranch hands, George Hammer, in the southwest corner of Saskatchewan where he has his own preserve on prairie wolves allocated by the Saskatchewan government after posting a bond.

A pilot for the last 20 years, Sands tours into the area at the controls of the small, two-seater plane with Hammer beside him, an automatic shotgun with heavy shot handy, also keeping an eye peeled for lean, fawn-colored animals.

This is business for even now with coyote skin prices the lowest they have been in years, they clear $10 on each pelt. In previous winters—Sands hunted by air in Alberta for three winters before moving into Saskatchewan last fall—he received about $25 a pelt and bagged between 300 and 400 pelts a season.

When a coyote is spotted, the plane swoops even lower on the attack and Hammer gets in his shot as Sands manoeuvres the plane. When the animal is killed, the plane skims in on its skis beside it. The skinning job can be done in about three minutes with skilful knife strokes.

Sands finds good hunting in Sasktachewan.

"I killed 23 wolves the very first day and I've been bagging them regularly all winter," he said. "Often a bunch of six or more can be killed within a radius of less than half a mile."

Although Sands was the first to be issued an air hunting licence in Saskatchewan, others have taken up the idea. Permits have also been issued to southwestern Saskatchewan men. Bonds of between $500 and $1,000 must be posted.
