

Rid Country Of Mosquitoes, Flies

Mosquitoes and black flies may not be such a plague in certain parts of the central interior henceforth if the provincial government meets with a request that is being made by the Associated Boards of Trade of Central

British Columbia. The request is that the government carry out during the spring and summer of 1950 a campaign of control through aerial spraying such as proven effective in other parts.

MINERAL PROSPECTING

that huge geological formation are known. This constitutes a challenge to exploration engineers and geologists.

MORE SCIENCE NEEDED

"There is a growing need for more scientific methods of prospecting," he said. "We must develop methods which will give us an idea of the underlying rock in areas covered by muskeg and heavy overburden."

Illustrating the chances against any property being brought into production on a paying basis, Mr. Moore declared that records of Ontario mines show that only one out of every 480 arrives at a state where it shows a bare operating profit and only one out of 1,500 develops into a genuinely paying producer.

"The initial cost of bringing a mine into production is about $5,000 for each ton of ore, so you can understand that heavy capital expenditures are involved. It is really risk capital."

Since scientific prospecting methods and large expenditures are necessary, development companies look favorably only on prospects which indicated highly concentrated ore bodies of large size. Development plans often hinge on reports of engineers and geologists, and often the reports of different experts differ.

"Consolidated Mining and Smelting chooses to finance its properties by itself, although some companies allow public participation by selling shares," he said. "Often a prospector with a likely claim will go to a broker and a mine will be financed completely by public subscription to its stocks."

Mr. Moore told of a lead-zinc property in northern Alberta which had been known to exist for more than half a century, but which is now being developed by Consolidated and associated companies only after scientific exploration indicated an economic
