Blackwood On Bridge By Easley Blackwood

Just why my friend Mr. Muzzy continues to play bridge at all, nobody knows. He leads out of turn. He forgets to count trumps. Sometimes he forgets what trumps are.

Too often he goes down three or four tricks doubled when he should be down only one. Everybody knows Mr. Muzzy, and everybody has had him for a partner at one time or another. East dealer

On today's hand he was the partner of Mr. Dale, the old timer who knows all the angles Mr. Dale figured from the bidring that the opponents had a sure game.

He also figured that he could sacrifice at four spades for a maximum loss of 300 points. He knew that going set only 300 points when the enemy could make game would represent nice saving to his side.

204 4th Street spades, Mr. Abel and Mr. Masters would have to be careful not to cash their two top diamonds prematurely, for then Mr. Muzzy could toss a losing club on the jack of diamonds and hold the set to one trick. Even with perfect defence four spades would have been down only two.

Why didn't Mr. Dale make this sacrifice bid? The answer is easy. He wanted to get the rubber over. He wanted a new part-
