Paris Secret

Bootleg Hats

PARIS Reuters)-"Bootlegged" hats are a secret of Paris millinery circles. They're on only to those who know their around the Paris fashion underworld.

The first step is to obtain the address of a good hat-bootlegger -a rare bird because she must have a quick eye, clever hands and many friends.

Then the inevitable climb up flight after flight of stairs to the which hides a woman's paradise. An eye appears at peep-hole. Credentials are checked, more closely than if you were being admitted to the vaults at Fort Knox.

Once inside, it is a "prix unique" (one price) system-5,000 francs ($14) for any hat. But the choice includes the latest models from the leading milliners. If you have your heart set on a little Dior or a wonderful Legroux number which has tempted you. there it is-for 5,000 francs instead of the 20,000 francs which caused you to quail at the thought of your husband's reception of the bill.

A careful explanation to Madame Bootlegger suffices. She knows every hat in town and is ords, etc. between Post Office capable of copying it so exactly and Bank of Montreal. Box that even its creator would be mistaken.

There is an important point in today's hand. It comes up froquently. Mr. Champion opened the bidding on the South cards with one spade. Now if Mr. Abel passed, Miss Brash would be perfectly justified in raising to two

> As a matter of fact, a single raise of partner's suit, given after an opponent's overcall, has a special meaning. It means, "Partner, I am not stretching my cards. I have a good, sound

Mr. Champion read that meaning into Miss Brash's bid today. He had well over a minimum opening and if his partner had a free raise, there should be a good play for game. So he jumped straight to four spades.

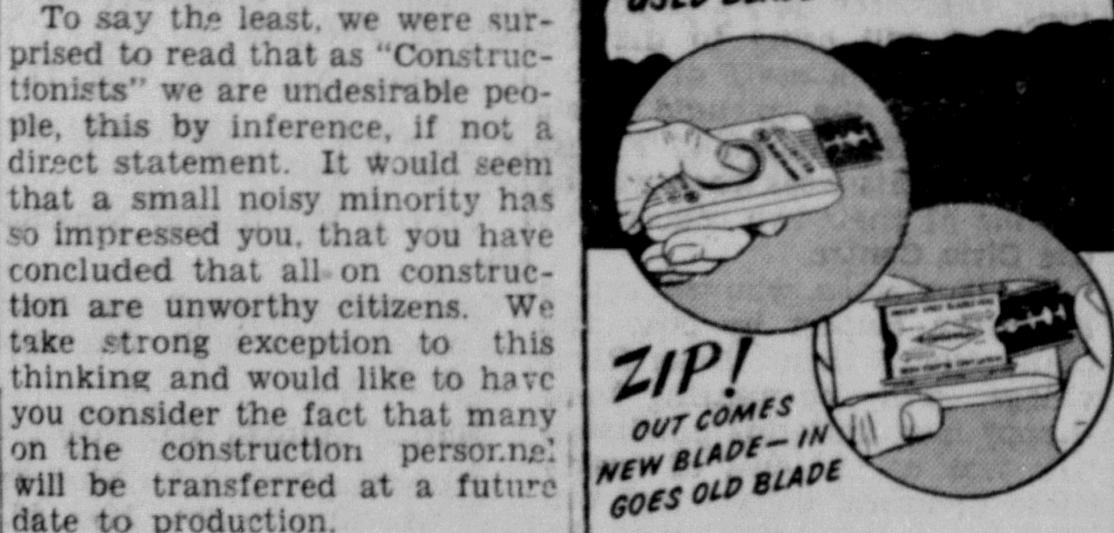

When the dummy went down, Mr. Champion let out a roar that shook the window panes. Mr. Abel's opening lead was the king of hearts and Mr. Champion won with the ace. He led a small diamond and when Mr. Abel played low he went right up with dummy's king. The right led off the board and permitted to ride. Mr. Abel won with the king, cashed the queen and jack of hearts and then led the ace of diamonds for the setting trick.
