Problem of Ruhr

THE PROBLEM OF THE RUHR is in the foreground of the diplomatic scene again. Ownership of the collieries and steel works is being vested in German "trustees" appointed by the British and American Military Governors. A Six-Power meeting in London is setting up the "International Authority for the Ruhr." In Frankfurt, the "Occupation Statute," which will define the relations of the future West German government with the occupying Powers, is being drafted; and this, too, will deal among other things with the control of Ruhr industries.

The basic difficulty of the whole question is its dual character. Many people think of "the Ruhr" as simply a vast arsenal devoted primarily and mainly to the production of instruments of war; and of the Ruhr problem simply as one of "security" against a future re-arming of Germany for purposes of new aggression. If it were so, the remedy would be comparatively simple.

But the Ruhr is, in fact, the greatest single area of coal and metallurgical production in all Europe and, indeed, in the world-whether for peaceful or for warlike purposes. All Western Europe has need of Ruhr coal and of Ruhr steel, as well as of many of the manufactured goods produced in the area.

The economic revival of the Ruhr is essential for the economic recovery of Western Europe. Yet its uncontrolled revival would involve military dangers, both for the West and for the East. The problem is the need for reviving Ruhr production, at the same time ensuring that it shall not be used for German re-armaments

The Anglo-American thesis is that the Ruhd industries will only function efficiently if they are owned and managed by Germans and the territory administered as an integral part of Germany. Allied control there must be. But its purpose should be limited to two essentials-to ensuring that an adequate proportion of Ruhr production of coal and steel is made available for other European countries and to ensure that there is no production, - and no preparation for production, of munitions of war.

It is agreed in principle that even after the end of occupation, Allied supervision and control will still be essential for an indefinite period. How and by what body is it to be exercised? What authority shall that body have? How shall its authority be enforced in case of need?

That is the residual problem of the Ruhr. It is by no means an easy one. And the preliminary discussions of it which are expected during the London talks are likely to be far more important than the mere setting-up of an organization to allocate West German production of coal, coke and steel as between export and home consumption.

TRANSCANADA HIGHWAY

I NUSUAL INTEREST is being shown in the con-I ference on a TransCanada highway which has been called to meet in the capital on December 14. Every provincial premier in Canada has anmounced his intention of attending or sending a representative. The conference will be under the chairmanship of Hon. James A. Mackinnon, Minister of Mines and Resources.

The concern shown in this national project shows the deep feeling for Canadian unity and understanding. Canada is a nation of vast terri-* tory, of regions separated by national barriers of people differing in religions, racial origins and temperament. The establishment of a federation among the Canadian provinces was an act of great political courage. It was made possible only because the Fathers of Confederation believed that unity could be achieved in diversity.

This unity has already been achieved in an almost surprising measure and a modern Trans-Canada highway will be an important factor in completing it. Without doubt it is appreciation of this that explains the interest shown in the project.

PLIGHT OF BIRDS

THESE ARE DEEP SNOWS Prince Rupert is having. It has been a great time for the youngsters. Pedestrians have been having to do some heavy slogging. It has been anything but good gaing for the car drivers. But no one has been suffering any more than a little inconvenience.

However, our birds, who have been flitting about in their large numbers even within the last few days finding plenty to eat in the mild late fall, have been caught suddenly. One of our good old friends reminded us yesterday of the birds. "How about putting in a line about feeding the birds?" he suggested-a suggestion to which we gladly and sympathetically accede. Yes, how about a thought for the birds and a few crumbs or so in the bargain for our feathered friends?
