

Canadian Coastguard

C STABLISHMENT of a coastguard service on the Leoasts of Canada is another thing for which we have long agitated, the Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce and the Daily News having pioneered in the movement, so it is satisfactory to have confirmation from Ottawa of the decision to create a unified rescue service co-ordinating existing departmental and service facilities with the Royal Canadian Air Force, logically enough, as the nerve centre.

This is a different set-up, of course, from the straight coastguard such as that of the United States. Yet there is no reason why, if properly knit and controlled, it should not prove quite effective. Vessels of one department or another, in summer at least, are dispersed pretty well along the coast and among the islands where they would be ready for Ray Reflects call in case of emergency. Possibly, in winter when the accidents are liable to happen and when potential rescue vessels would normally be in more central locations, it might be advisable to have some reassignments of surface craft at points of vantage. There would also appear to be places such as Prince Rupert, the Queen Charlotte Islands, Port Hardy where aircraft might be permanently stationed. All this of course, is something to be worked out under the scheme of co-ordination under the basic policy.

In any case, it is gratifying that something on having a good time. definite and apparently effective is being done to meet the situation. If properly organized, it should work out very well and be a great boon and safeguard to ships and those who serve upon them.

"AURORA" OUT

ARGEST and most ambitious publication to date L of "Aurora," annual of Booth Memorial High School, is now off the press. It is a sixty-page production in larger format than before and turned out this time by the monolith instead of the usual presswork method.

School activities are reviewed in interesting and comprehensive manner with a variety of articles and there are numerous special features.

Silhouette decorations provide something new and modern and group and personal illustrations are used in abundance.

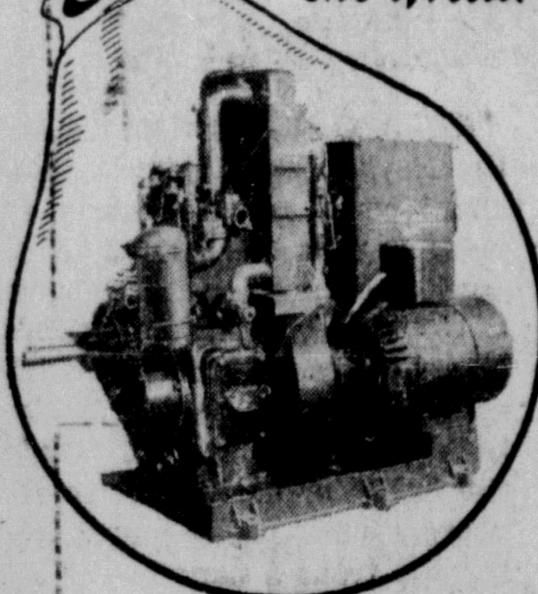

It is a creditable addition to the lengthening list of "Auroras" and Irene Hanson, editor-in-chief, and her staff are to be congratulated on the result of their efforts.
