The packer Cape Perry, Capt. Henry Helin returned to the city Thursday after a trip to Port Simpson where fire Wednesday destroyed the home of the skipper. The Atlin Fisheries owned vessel had been packing halibut from fish camps, but upon receiving word of the fire, Capt. Helin nosed his vessel for home. His wife and children were not injured in the blaze. The packer had been up in the northern Queen Charlotte waters when the blaze at Port Simpson occurred.

"There comes the mosquito fleet," somebody yelled on the busy waterfront Thursday afternoon. Sure enough, plowing into Prince Rupert harbor for Cow Bay were 12 small craft, skippered by natives from the Naas River country. Most waterfront observers thought the vessels were escaping the rough weather in the fishing grounds. One of the skippers said the weather was bad in that area but they were not fishing for halibut. The boats were enroute to the mouth of the Skeena River and the canneries situated there. They will be engaged, as always, in salmon trolling.

Weather situation up the Naas, one of the natives said, is very good.

It looked as if the halibut vessel J. H. Todd, Capt. Paul Duvie, was going to unload a catch of halibut here Thursday, but the vessel stuck around for a while, took on supplies and fuel and continued to Klenbu. It had, in its holds, 10,000 pounds of fish.

Purser Reg Stover and Assistant Purser Don Nelson are back on duty aboard the steamer Camosun after an extended holiday jaunt by bus to California, New Orleans, Florida, Washington and New York. It was no busman's holiday either. They kept away from steamships and, as modern knights of the road, saw many interesting and impressive things. With Mr. Stover returning to the Camosun, G. C. Foote, who has been relieving as purser on the Camosun, has gone over to the Coquitlam to relieve Purser A. H. Robinson who has gone ashore in Vancouver for vacation.

A considerable amount of hard work goes into a fish catch. And when an above average catch is made, a great deal of credit should be given to a crew, especially the Captain. Not since the steam trawler days here during the First World War and up to 1934, has a catch of flatfish amounted to 100,000 pounds. The Canadian Fish and Cold Storage plant at Seal Cove Wednesday morning tipped its hat to Capt. Dave Moore, skipper of the Santa Maria No. 11 who landed the mentioned weight of sole at the company's dock. An official of the company phoned the Daily News office the same day and talked highly of Capt. Moore.

Union Steamships' Camosun, Capt. W. McCoomb, arrived in port Friday at 1:30 p.m. from Vancouver and waypoints, sailing for southern Queen Charlotte points at 10 p.m. On his first trip since his vacation, Reg Stover was back in the purser's office. Passengers disembarking here included Mr. and Mrs. D. R. West, Mrs. Whitaker, J. Bulger, R. Gillies, Mrs. S. M. Johnson and child, Mrs. E. M. Beeststone, R. Purdy, Mr. and Mrs. J. Pettenuzzo, Mrs. A. Moore, Alex Bezks, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Cawdell and children.

Tuesday, the first carload of fresh fish left Prince Rupert, and from now on, or until after the end of the season, this class of freight will be moving steadily. No one, at present, can say precisely how long halibut fishing will last for the catches are being made on the quota basis.

Salmon trollers clearing for the fishing grounds during the week have included the Active, Capt. J. Jenkins; Banner II, Capt. S. Sjoberg; Hansine, Capt. A. C. Crump; Pride, Capt. S. J. Amstutz; Mermald, Capt. J.

It was Union Steamships night again late Sunday afternoon at the C.N.R. docks as the Camosun and the Coquitlam docked enroute to their respective destinations. Aboard the Coquitlam, Capt. J. Boden, when it docked here at 7 p.m., were over 20 employees for the Canadian Fish and Cold Storage Co. at Seal Cove. Passengers disembarking here totalled 55. The vessel sailed for Stewart, Alice Arm and northern coastal points at 11 p.m. Passengers disembarking here included C. T. Campbell, Mrs. H. Mills and children, D. Jensen, B. Claridge, J. Edwardson, J. McCough, V. Williams, M. Hendrickson, E. Vance, R. Bell, D. Alstrom, J. Gillis, F. Davis, D. Foote, Mrs. G. A. McCullough, Miss D. I. Goodridge, Mr. and Mrs. K. Maltman.
