Seineboats Moving Out—Indications of Tuna—Netters Are Doing Better

Seineboats in the Prince Rupert district will leave for the inshore salmon fishing grounds tomorrow and Monday following settlement of their dispute with the cannery operators over their right to sell fish to the highest bidder. While a compromise was affected in the major issue over whether or not crews of cannery boats can sell the fish they catch to other than the companies to which they are under contract, the fishermen feel that they have made a gain in other matters. In the settlement is a clause which provides that the cannery companies will pay the rental on radiophones in the seiners which, according to the fishermen, they have had to do previously. Crews also will be paid for "stripping" the nets at the end of the season, an operation which has been part of their work in the past for which they say they have received no extra compensation. Negotiations between the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union this week resulted in the 14 companies involved agreeing that fish may be sold by their boat crews to the highest bidders providing the bids cover a whole area and not just individual cases. The Prince Rupert local of the U.F.A.W.U. last night authorized union crews to take the boats out this week-end following receipt of word of the settlement from the south.

A break in the inactive albacore tuna fishery is a possibility in the near future on the strength of reports coming from outside waters. A Canadian boat, the Zorina, operated by Capt. Fred Homer of Victoria, was reported this week to have found tuna off the Columbia River and there are indications that they may soon be found farther north. The Fisheries protective vessel Howay, which is working her way northward from Victoria on tuna patrol, reported Friday that she had encountered water warm enough for tuna off Cape Cook. Experience on this coast has revealed that tuna do not inhabit water of a temperature below 57 degrees. The Howay, under command of Capt. W. Redford, left Victoria a week ago and will cruise waters off Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlotte. She will put into Prince Rupert on July 14.

FLEET STARTS—Seine boats like the one pictured here normally head out the first week of July for the annual harvest of salmon, but a fisherman's disagreement with the boat's owners had kept them in port. The dispute is now settled and the boats are now heading out. (C. P. Photo) their most profitable week since the season opened on June 19 but, even at that, it was not any world beater. At the canneries, though, no one is complaining too loudly. Some 500 boats on the Skeena this week averaged between 170 and 180 fish per boat, working out at about 30 fish a day. High boats went well above the 100 mark while many were lower. Catches were somewhat slow during the first part of the week but improved during the last couple of days. On the Naas, more than 100 gillnetters are doing about the same as on the Skeena. Average for the 24-hour period ending at noon Friday was 30 fish per boat.

LOCAL BOAT ARRESTED

A Canadian halibut vessel has been taken into custody in American waters on a charge of fishing in Area Two—which is now closed—under an Area Three permit. The vessel is the Prince Rupert boat Selma H which is now in custody of the American Fish and Wild Life Service at Sitka, pending arrangements for handing her over to Canadian authorities. According to word from Sitka, the Selma H was tagged by the Fish and Wild Life Service fishing below the Area Three boundary.

Sockeye salmon pack on the B.C. coast since the season opened on June 19 on the Skeena and June 25 in southern waters could be described as "average." Princess Kathleen docked here according to figures contained at 11:30 Friday morning, north-bound for Juneau and Skagway. She was under command of Capt. Graham O. Hughes.
