Alaska and Prince Rupert

THE ADVANTAGEOUS USE to which the port of Prince Rupert could be put as the nearest transcontinental railhead to Alaska was again referred to yesterday when we published an interview with George Sundborg who plays an important part in Alaskan affairs as consultant of the Alaska Development Board. He is also executive assistant to Governor Ernest Gruening whose desire to free Alaska from the shackles of Seattle and its transportation monopoly has long since been well known.

Water, of course, will eventually flow downhill and business between Alaska and the United States despite all artificial barriers, must gradually develop. We saw what occurred in this way during the emergency of war. With shipping along the coasts of the United States now tied up by labor troubles, another emergency is arising in which Prince Rupert will, no doubt, be once again used. Meantime, we can keep closely in touch with the Alaskan situation and do what we can to give friendly assistance to the territory in her fight for a better deal which she has been so long denied.

FEW COME HERE

WE NOTICE that Rt. Hon. James G. Gardiner, federal minister of agriculture, has been in Prince George and addressed a public meeting there last night. We are sorry that Mr. Gardiner, long a top figure in federal government affairs and the principal contender against Mr. St. Laurent for the Liberal leadership at the recent national convention, could not have seen his way fit to come along to Prince Rupert when he was so close. We would have liked to have received him and shown him what we have here including the shipping facilities, never forgetting our elevator, in which he, doubtless, should be interested.

It is noticeable that federal cabinet ministers have been few and far between in their visits to Prince Rupert in spite of the important position we think this place holds in the national picture.

HUDSON BAY

THIS IS NOT the first time naval vessels have been seen in Hudson Bay, although never before have Canadian ships entered there, on naval duties. The last time a warship was seen was H.M.S. Scarborough. The cruiser was on a hydrographic survey and the year was 1937.

Although remote, and comparatively little known, this inland sea of the north can be rightly called historic waters. Not only fighting craft have been seen there long ago. The sound of hostile guns has disturbed the stillness. A century and a half ago British and French sloops fought an action, in the rivalry that existed for control of the valuable fur trade. So Hudson Bay, named after the explorer and navigator, has not been entirely out of the picture.

The presence of Canadian ships, and expansion and activity at Port Churehill is a clear indication that the day of isolation is becoming a thing of the past. International relationship, new ways and means of defence on land, sea and in the air, Canadian responsibility for guarding her own coasts are but some of the reasons why Hudson Bay, slowly but steadily, is emerging to form an active part of the life of the Dominion.

THE EDITOR'S POLICY

THE CANADIAN Weekly Editor observes that some of the old timers are complaining that newspapering isn't what it used to be. "Gone are the days when the local editor really speaks his mind. Gone are the caustic pens, the stinging editorials, the big scale exposes."

Few will deny that the colorful, rip-snorting newspaper days of yesteryear have indeed disappeared but some of the changes have been for the better. Nevertheless, it may well be that the trend among many editors to lose their old fighting spirit in their search for a happy medium between the idealistic and the practical is developing into an unhealthy trend.

However, as Canadian Weekly Editor concludes, "it's impossible to remain in everybody's good books. And small town newspaper readers are all too quick to heap abuse on their editor for his sins of commission and omission."

"On the long haul, however, it is perhaps the better part of business wisdom to make decisions on the good old-fashioned premise that truth and fairness pay off."

It's sometimes difficult, however, when the editor's friends seek favors forgetting or perhaps not caring that the granting of a favor to one is as much a disfavor to someone else, especially those who are considerate enough not to ask special favors. The one who asks the favor would probably be the one to protest most loudly if a similar favor were granted to someone else.

SALVATIONISTS ARE WELCOMED

Senior Major and Mrs. C. W. Warrender, Received Monday

A good-sized congregation gathered in the Salvation Army Citadel Monday evening, the occasion being a public welcome to the new Salvation Army Divisional Commanders, Senior Major and Mrs. C. Warrender. A series of meetings, in connection with the annual Congress, had been in progress since late last week, being conducted by Commissioner Charles Baugh and Col. G. Best, Field Secretary. Delegates came here from different outlying points.

Commissioner Baugh presided during the first part of last night's meeting. His duties involve considerable travel for he is territorial commander for Canada, Newfoundland and Bermuda. He spoke of the power of Salvation, the profound change it can and does make in one's life and of the great things achieved through the love of God and true fellowship.

Mrs. Warrender expressed appreciation felt by Major Warrender and herself and for the warmth of the greeting accorded them in Prince Rupert. Their services in the future, they felt, could not but be abundantly successful when such friendliness and goodwill was so much in evidence.

Major Warrender spoke along similar lines. He paid a tribute to Brigadier Gillingham who, after performing long and devoted work in the north, was now taking well earned retirement. He recalled early associations with Brigadier Gillingham in other parts of the country. In a review of the general work of the Salvation Army he mentioned how this can best be done through the blending of the human and the divine.

The concluding speaker was Colonel G. Best, field secretary, who emphasized how one, although apparently weak and impotent and without faith or confidence, can nevertheless rise in his strength, once he realizes the power that comes to him, through Almighty God.

The proceedings throughout, were interspersed with devotional exercises including a solo by John Linney.

Among the delegates in town were Envoy and Mrs. Walker from Canyon City.

FIT FOR A KING—Just a bit informal for a member of "royalty," is Queen Irene Gerwatoska, 5, as she publicly kisses King Raymond Stednick, 2. The youngsters were crowned in a New York playground contest for the most handsome boy and the prettiest girl.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Watson, moving from Premier following the closing down of the Subac-Premier mine, arrived in the city on the Camosun yesterday from the north and will spend a week here before proceeding to Vancouver. Mr. Watson has been with the mechanical department at Premier.

CHURCH IN NEW HOME

Special services, in charge of G. R. S. Blackaby, marked the opening of the new church home on Sixth Avenue East of Regular Baptist Church on Sunday.

C. J. Carter of the Shanty-men's Christian Association was the speaker in the evening on the subject of "The Robber King." The discourse was of a fine spiritual character and was marked by definite results.

MERCHANTS—Do you know that the Daily News is the most effective medium of advertising in Prince Rupert? No one misses your message if it's advertised in the News. It's the really efficient way of putting it over.

When two young people came forward to make definite decisions.

There was a record attendance for the opening of Sunday School in the afternoon when Manville Bedford was the special speaker.

The new building was admired by all the attendants at services. It was erected at a cost of $4500 by the Northwest Construction Co. With exterior measurement of 76 by 24 feet it has a 60 by 24 foot auditorium which is light and airy.
