Moose Women to Visit P. George

Several members of the local Women of the Moose will be leaving during the coming week-end for Prince George to join with the ladies of the same organization in a special meeting. The last regular meeting here was a special rally gathering and resulted in a good attendance to witness the initiation of five new members.

Mrs. F. Parlette was in the chair. Plans were made for two important events to be held next month—the annual bazaar and banquet.

Following the business session, two boxes of candy were auctioned off and sold to Mrs. A. Marshall. Then a few tables of whist were enjoyed with prize-winners, Mrs. J. Bond and Mrs. P. Briggs. Delicious refreshments were served by Mooseheart committee with Mrs. Jack Hoskins as chairman.

Mr. Davies shares his ticket with another forestry department clerk—Roderick M.L.D. 22. They could share $73,000 if their horse—Coalition—wins.

Princess Born Girl Reigns Over Prince Rupert Governor's Mansion

Mrs. McGillivray Now at Kingston, Jamaica, Where She is Charming Hostess

An attractive Prince Rupert-born matron, Mrs. MacGillivray, has become one of the gracious leaders and hostesses of the West Indian island of Jamaica, where her husband, Hon. D. C. MacGillivray, is the acting governor. The social section of the newspaper recently contained an intimate something vital is lacking at once," she added with her intriguing habit of emphasizing certain words. "Of course," she continued, "I've had no time for gardening since I came here, but just the same, I love it."

On the much discussed but still important subject of women's taste in current fashions, Mrs. MacGillivray has her own decided ideas.

"I like pastel blues and greens," she disclosed, "especially worn with black accessories. I think a woman should dress to suit herself and not slavishly follow styles that are suitable for other women."

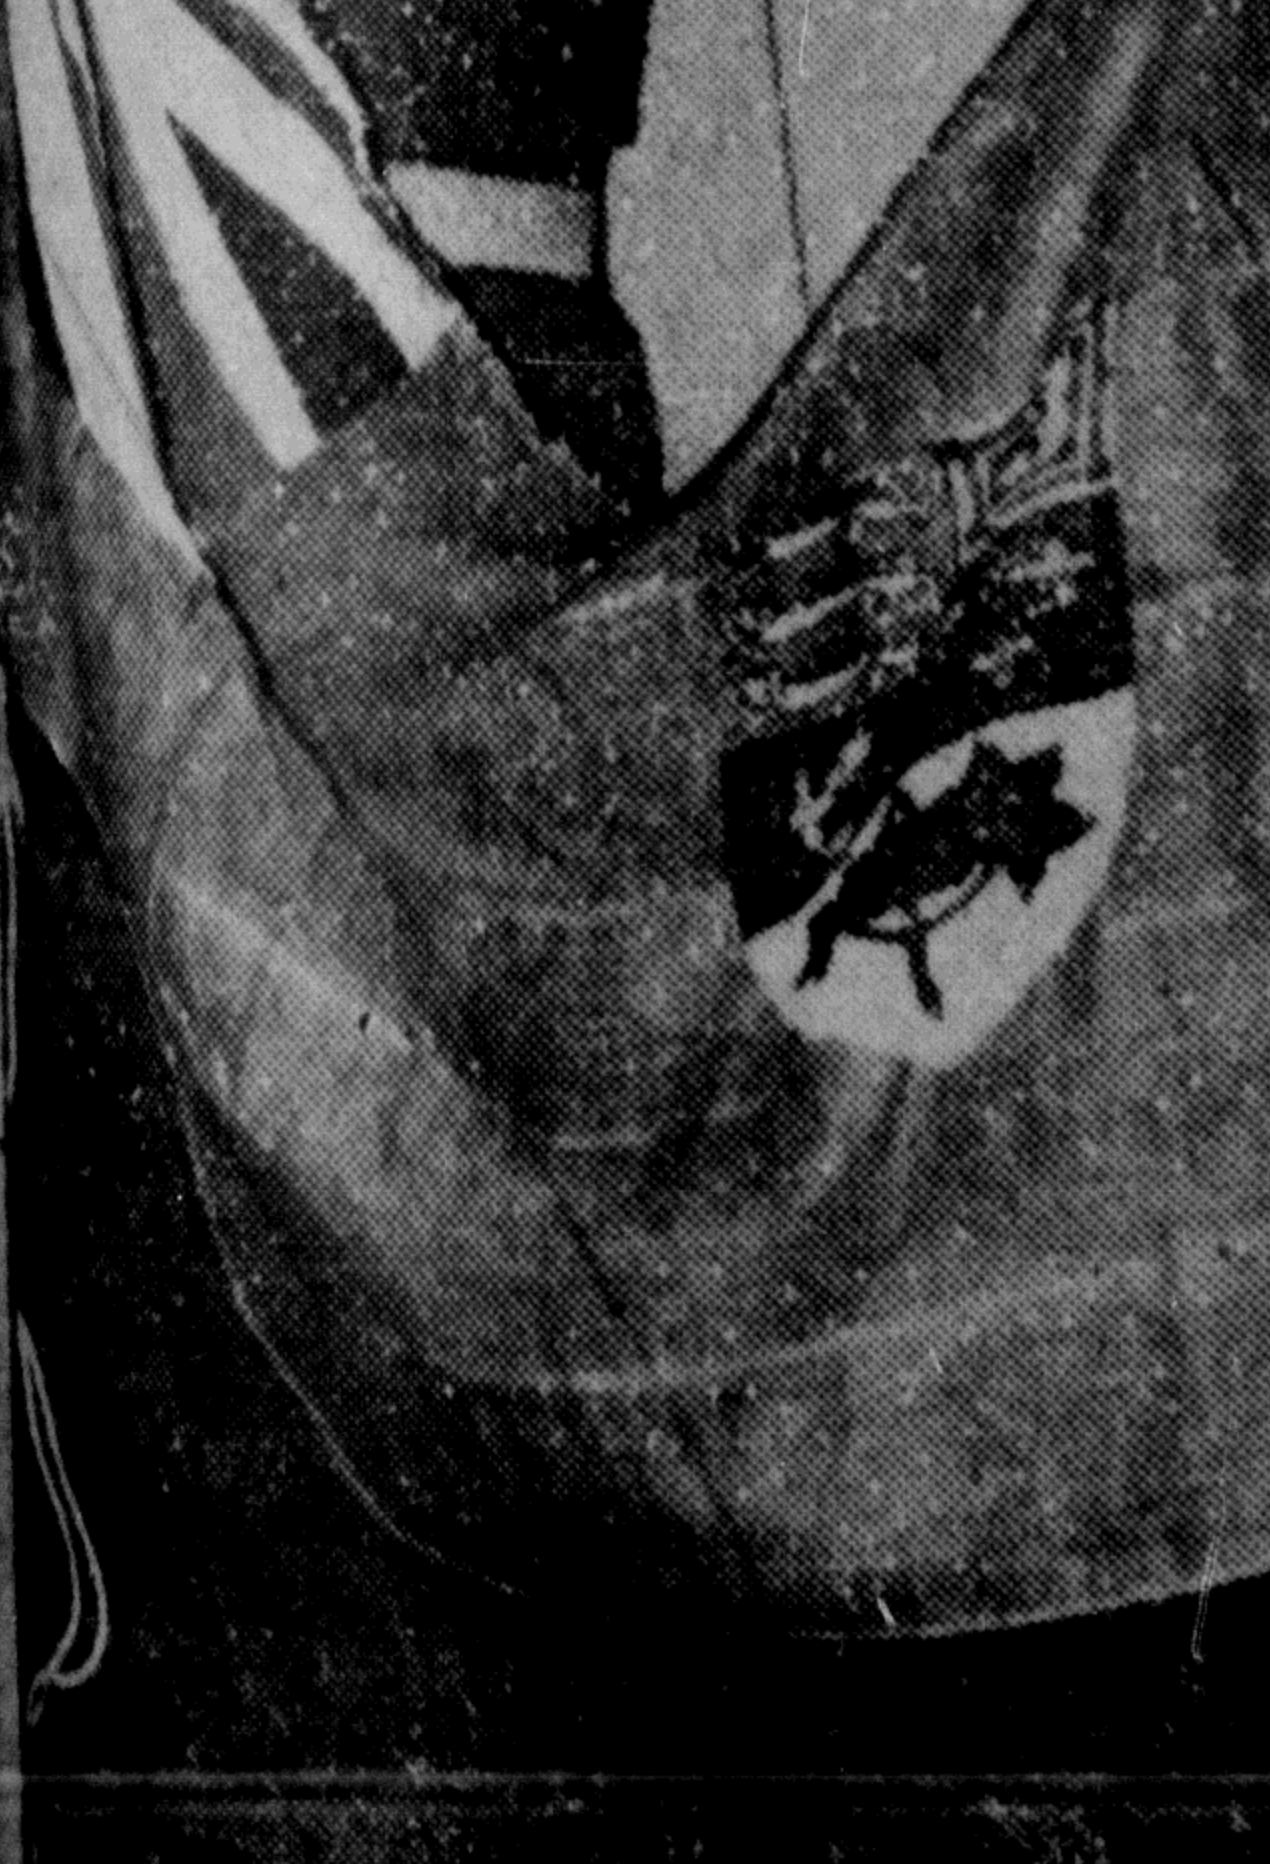

For formal occasions Mrs. MacGillivray likes severe black, well-cut and with as little fuss as possible. "Good jewellery is essential with this type of dress," she added: "and for ordinary occasions something light like a figured silk print is definitely chic."

For the interview she was dressed simply in a stone-colored linen with fringed edges—her only jewellery being a pearl necklace and a platinum wrist-watch.

She does not sleep in the afternoon because "it's bad for the figure," and rises as early as six o'clock every morning.

When breakfast with her husband is over soon after eight o'clock she tackles her list of pressing engagements for the day, lunches at 1:15 p.m., and devotes the afternoon and evening to correspondence, social engagements, and formal or informal functions, usually accompanied after dinner by her husband.

"My husband and I do not discuss business much," she confided, explaining that after a day of hard concentration on political and administrative matters, she considered it ill-advised to dwell longer on such topics during their hours of relaxation together. "What did you do today?" is a question to which Mrs. MacGillivray seldom, if ever subjects her husband.

OVER U.S. SOIL—For the first time in history, the Canadian Red Ensign is flying over a military establishment in the United States. It was raised over Fort Lewis, Wash., with the aid of advance units of the Canadian Army Special Service for final training. It will continue to fly until all troops are overseas. Here, in this Canadian Army photo, the flag is being raised from the hayrack, following sounding of retreat, by Robert Band of Regina, left, and Pte. Victor Maranda of Prince Rupert and Kingston.
