British Elections

VEN AT A LATE HOUR this morning, long after the polls in yesterday's general election doing day and night. Rupert had closed, the result of the British contest was still inconclusive. The Labor government had by last might what appeared to be a solid lead of seats on returns from large metropolitan and industrial areas, where admittedly lay its principal strength. Results from the country, however, coming in today, were sharply whittling this down. A few hours before these words appeared in print it was still conceiveable that, meagre as their wins might have been, the almost disappearing Liberal party might have the balance of power. Political prophets had - proven themselves correct. It was an extremely close fight with indications that it would be a photofinish up to the accounting for the last seat.

It was probably too much to expect that there would be a decisive result in this election, much as it might have been desired in view of the foreboding 17 36551011 uncertainty of the future both in the economic and international fields and the heavy and perplexing problems that lie ahead. Early indications are that it will be another election for Great Britain soon unless some sort of a nationalist government, which the state of affairs today might justify, is formed.

At least, Britons did decide they were not wanting radical changes. The complete rejection of Communists and Left Wing Laborites made that clear.

IMPRESSING WASHINGTON

THE CRYING NEED always of the vast Pacific area has been for more and better grounded knowledge in Washington, says Christian Science Monitor.

The congressional groups which have visited the Pacific lands in recent weeks, including Alaska and Hawaii . . . leave behind the distinct impression that the long existing situation will get their informed attention.

In addition to the members of Congress, the parties included staff members of various depart- the election of officers for the ments-army, navy, interior, state . . . .

. Members of Congress, representing a diversity James B. Gibson, Bishop of Caleof political opinion and geography, leave with wide agreement on at least one subject—the importance N. E. Arnold. of the Pacific to the future of the United States.

They have seen, and most have been rudely shocked by it, the transformation of a vast section of the world from a friendly area to one under the domination of Soviet Russia. . . .

Hawaii and Alaska loom large in the reflection that United States is too weak militarily in the Pacific.

Statehood for Alaska and Hawaii has received distinct impetus in the visit of these members of the senate and house.

And while Washington is mentioned here, we wonder if Ottawa is sufficiently interested in the Pacific scene. Certainly, the visitations we get at Prince Rupert would not indicate much interest.

WHY NO WHEAT HERE?

ANCOUVER'S GRAIN movement this season is setting a high mark for recent years as the ocean freight rate situation encourages shipment by way of the Pacific Coast instead of by the eastern route with a current saving to Britain of 10c a bushel or so. It is no wonder, therefore, that Prince Rupert people wonder why the elevator here should continue to be an unused and seemingly forgotten outlet. Of course, if we choose to accept the situation without even making an inquiry of the authorities such as the Canadian Wheat Board, nobody else is going to worry about us, certainly not Vancouver, even if the recent snow blockades of the i railway lines to that port did hold up the movement of wheat there quite considerably. It would seem timely for the Prince Rupert Chamber of Commerce and the city council to be getting busy and find out why nothing is being done about using the local house. We should be entitled to some excuse even if it is that they allowed the place to get frozen up and out of commission or maybe they could blame it on the water or the power shortage or even the cold weather although there are terminal grain elevators, which are used once in a while, in places colder than Prince Rupert at its moderate worst.
