

When the ships of the Royal Canadian Navy's northern task force visited Wakeham Bay, near the northern end of Hudson Strait, they found the population there to consist of one Obblate missionary and 80 Eskimos. The Eskimos spoke neither English or French but this proved no obstacle so far as making friends was concerned. Gifts of candy, fruit and cigarettes quickly established the sailors popularity. This Eskimo family at Wakeham Bay is obviously enjoying the cigarettes supplied by Petty Officer Frederick Machan of Halifax. (RCN Photo)
