V/HEN WE WERE chatting with a good friend awhile ago, our talk drifted to the subject of communism. Our friend is honestly opposed to communism but he is of the elect few who try to see the element of good in even the worst cause. "Why," he asked, "when you write of communism, do you never have a good word to say? Sometimes even the communists are right, you know. They are human, like other people, they like people to think well of them. But don't you think, that when you can see something to praise, you should give them a break and praise it-praise it without any 'buts' or 'of course, on the other hand' tones, just praise without qualification?"

It is difficult not to feel like a bit of a heel in taking this argument as a text for doing the exact opposite. We are quite in accord with our friend's statement that sometimes the communists are right in their acts or contentions. No one can always be wrong. But-there goes the 'but' that we were to "avoid-on thinking over our friend's argument, we "were brought up short by this very patent fact that actions or words don't stand by themselves. It is the directing intent behind them that determines their character. When communism walks softly, and deals justly, and speaks with reasonableness with deluding mankind into believing that the creed is not as bad as it is painted, then the bearing of the deed itself is bad.

The obligation on us, we think, is no to sentimentalize our reasoning by believing that a pat on the head will make bad boys good. The obligation is to be a little in the image of God, not looking only at the outward appearance, but at what is in the heart. To give credit for what appear to be reasonable acts, to look for good where we do not sincerely believe good is, but only the devious semblance of good, is to add another voice, not to the chorus of free thought, but to voices keyed to delude and destroy.

THE LUMBER INDUSTRY

THERE ARE GROUNDS for somewhat greater optimism toward the outlook for the lumber industry. Demand continues unabated, both abroad and from domestic markets, a recent survey shows. Many of the smaller independent producers have been forced to close and this has caused some embarrassment but the main factors which lend optimism to the lumber outlook are: Construction needs here and in the U.S.; the world-wide reconstruction program. Countries needing to rebuild will find dollars with which to pay for purchases even at the expense of food.

HE IS RISEN

(By Rev. Earl Soiland, Pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church) "He is not here; for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." Matthew 28:6

Perhaps the greatest mystery is life and death. There is something about life that God has never revealed to man. We can analyze a body and find its chemical contents but that is only a beginning. We can explain how certain parts of a body functions and yet we cannot tell what makes it do what it does. For want of a better term we are

FUTURE

"I've done some heavy thinking about my career and I've got it all figured . . . I'm going to be a Forest Engineer." It's a mighty important job, too! Forests are B.C.'s most valuable crop, worth $225,000,000 last year. The Forest Engineer is a university-trained man who knows how to properly harvest the forest crop. His knowledge of silviculture, forest protection and correct cutting methods help ensure a perpetual crop of trees.
