Looking Backward

LOOKING BACKWARD

Nov. 20, 1922 from the "Banner"

It is 20 years ago that we stood on the city streets in 1922. The crowd was dense. The "Banner" was partially submerged in the traffic but by the assistance of several men behind the desk was safely recovered.

I was the student that called the first man. The skipper had taken a Latin grammar. To hear him say:

The skipper stood beside the desk.

And answered with the flourish he watched the engine smoke and flame.

But did it go? - not much.

Then up and spoke a crafty wit.

Who'd called the Daily News? I say here, say a little gas, and it may go again.

"Now come to think, my clever man: My dear old teacher said, but that be what - it must be so?"

By golly, right you are."

He called out from Eugene's post.

The engine sputtered back. And Latin whispered in his ear.

Served out to make him mad.

Down came the storm, and smote small.

The Asplands' fruit.

It dumped the skipper overboard.

He came up mighty pale.

"All hands on deck," the skipper cried.

His feet they came up too. The Asplands gave a lurch. Then dived side from view.

"Eh? I hear the church bells ring.

Wishes! What can it be? Pluto! I'm sitting fast. Mince! Oh! Wise is me."

At daylight into Cow Bay will he Asplands pass. Beneath the waves the skipper rats. A mermaid Latin class.

Student Voices THAT'S LIFE

During physics' attention under any circumstances, it is worth enough to consider the better part involved when a Bo-Me-Hi student average shows an air long-suffering (Mrs. Centre bright and early Monday morning. With dutiful students and shuffle bags the weary feet not eager that that students tramp through the back door to the dressing rooms. To the tune of spilt encouragement by the health teachers all are soon garbed in rumpled shirts and sweat shirts. Then the fun begins.

Is there a better way to dress? How Monday morning when that by turning hand-springs and stepping up the gym floor with freshly shampooed hair? After an hour of wiggling exercises eye-grazing footprints are no longer deemed necessary for the artist followers of our "Key Fit" program.

Next on the agenda is a shower. This is enjoyed by any who can address, refresh, re-dress, re-make up, re-comb and retire from the Centre in time for the next class at school.

On arriving, after tea after tea break enough, students struggle into classrooms seeking vacant grammar books and a place to hang a wet towel. How delighted is the classroom teacher to have his lessons interrupted thus, week after week.

We trust that by June dirting of prematurely greying students and agonized teachers alike will appear at the nearest rest home until the beckoning call of, or in the Wild can no longer be resisted. Then, eager for the battle, High School teachers will return. The cycle will resume, to be interrupted only by High School elections.

Perhaps the new school we can dream can't we? Well, about a gymnasium. Who knows, the wind and the rain may not be in

Tom Williamson Was Pioneer of Alaska

The Alaska Weekly, published in Seattle, makes mention of the recent death of Thomas C. Williamson in Stewart, notice of which has already appeared in the Daily News. After reference to his partnership with the late Frank Stevens and Carl Johnson in buying the Knorr Hotel here, the Alaska Weekly says he was well known in Fairbanks and at Mantley Hot Springs where he mined around 1911, and later was located in Siska.

3-30 BELL

I was sitting down reading a book when all of a sudden I heard a strangely familiar sound. There around me jumped from their seats, their eyes shining with a crazed look that one often sees in the eyes of mad animals, and ran out the door. A cold, clammy fear engulfed me. What was it, this sound that made humans seem like beasts, I must go. They can't leave me alone in here. Practically I grabbed my books and ran blindly down the main hall. Upon reaching the front door I found that it was locked. I could stand it no longer and I gave a loud scream and went dead in the world.

When I woke up I saw that I was in a small room lying on a day bed. Two women were talking.

"I can't understand it," one of them was saying. "I came down the stairs and saw her running toward the door. When she found it locked (that was because of the wind), she let out a ghastly scream. Must be a bit funny. What do you think?"

"I think that she couldn't bear the thought of staying in here another minute after 3:30 to knock my bell. She's just like the rest of them. So soon as they hear the bell they stampede like wild animals," the other replied.

THIS AND THAT

The 3:30 bell! This was the time that I had been waiting for. I then calmly proceeded home.

WORLD CITIZEN MOVEMENT SPREADS TO BERLIN

Garry Davis, founder of the world citizen movement, has been notified that his idea has caught fire in Berlin. A big meeting was held in the Taberna Academia following which proselytizing members paraded through the streets with placards and banners as shown, bidding for popular support. Davis, son of the famous U.S. society band leader, has been invited from Paris to Berlin as Berlin "is a natural home for world citizen," according to the invitation. Davis promised to come at the first opportunity. Legend on the signs says, "become a world citizen for the sake of world peace... for freedom from fear."
