DOUBLE HARVEST—The golden crops are harvested in the Woodbend oil field near Edmonton. Stocks of grain dotting the valley of the North Saskatchewan River tell of the golden wheat harvest. The oil derrick in the foreground speaks of another harvest—crude oil—below the wheat field. The well is near Canada's biggest producer of Gold Spike, Imperial Oil's Schöpp No. 1. (CP Photo)

If there's oil on those islands That's the stuff to give the future of this province and of everyone in it. A great gamble will be afoot when the first of Friday, July 22, 1910 says: drill on the Charlottes project. The water famine in the Grand Trunk creek from which we get our daily aqua pura has been temporarily suspended. They also had their little difficulties as far back as forty years ago, the vagaries of exchange rates. More ladies would look spick and span, if they didn't have so much span—Ottawa importance in itself. Citizen

Old timers who could always see the business hub of Prince Rupert between McBride and Sixth Streets continue to have their prescience justified. Latest examples are the Canadian Legion, First Avenue, and a theatre block at Third Avenue and First Street. It's not so easy to foretell a worthwhile location when the townsite is bare and desolate. Disappointments are always possible.

More significant, for the first time since the American Revolution, the tide of Americans and returning citizens into the Dominion is comparable with the exodus of Canadians south of the border.—Coronet.

Flush pay is commencing to dwindle in Newfoundland for the fishing industry is not what it used to be and the American payroll, born of wartime and afterwards, is less. More men are being laid off. The Newfoundland government suggest workers toil two days, but be paid for only one, and so on— one, two—one, two, etc. Some might call this the spreading out of available cash, but lots won't like it. The come down will be deuced uncomfortable.

Man from Prince Rupert, complains that a stranger he met in a beer parlor rolled him of $310, suit and watch. Plainly he was asking for it. Any good sized city is full of gentry watching for those who appear to require assistance in blowing a stake. They are thoroughly capable, and neglect no opportunity.

I feel for the man who has never gone without his dinner to buy a book of poems, a ticket to a concert, a little statuette, or even a pretty hat for his wife—Albert Edward Wigam.
