young Japanese cherry trees were presented to the city and these were planted on each side of the cinder pathway leading toward the railway station. The little trees, which blossom but do not bear fruit, made a pretty fair start but, in course of time, SALE PRICES most of them disappeared. Today, four are left. They stand on the harbor side of the pathway and have a healthy, growing appearance, although they look is if sometime, they had been pulled to one side or efforts had been made to do some uprooting.
