STEWART DEATH IS ACCIDENTAL

John Roy Stewart, 25-year-old Kincollth native, "came to his death by accidental drowning," according to the verdict reached by a coroner's jury which investigated the waterfront fatality.

The young man was drowned in the vicinity of the Standard Oil dock Saturday night, September 11, between the hours of 11 p.m. and 12 p.m. In presenting the verdict, the jury strongly recommended that this float and other floats on the waterfront be kept in a safe condition at all times.

Herbert Clayton, 14-year-old Indian boy, who was on the wharf and heard the splash as Stewart struck the water, was commended by Coroner M. M. Stephens for his actions in attempting to save the drowning man. Young Clayton had to run back the length of the British-American Oil Co.'s dock and across a rocky stretch of beach to get to the Standard Oil Co.'s wharf and go down onto the float. According to the evidence he lost no time in getting to the scene of the accident and shouted to his uncle, Capt. Percy Alexander of the seine-boat Kamchatka, as he ran.

Evidence presented during the inquest indicated that a combination of oil and heavy dew had made footing on the oil float very difficult. Principal witnesses at the inquest were Herbert Clayton, Capt. Percy Alexander, Herbert Dooland, Constable Redhead, Constable White and Henry MacKay, who identified the body of Stewart. Alexander and Dooland are brothers-in-law of deceased. Eye-glasses were still on deceased 12 hours after the body was recovered.

The jury consisted of Douglas Wood, foreman, William H. Nesbitt, Leonard F. Brewerton, John Hewsick, Ralph Heaton and Victor Preston.

Stewart was 25 years of age and had a widow and three children at Hidden Inlet, a salmon cannery on the Alsa side of Hidden Inlet.
