

Car Styles Offer Unlimited Scope For Future, Famed Designer Says

by DAVID J. WILKIE
DETROIT (AP) — The last word in automobile styling still is in the indefinite future. That's the opinion of Thomas Walker, noted industrial designer. Walker should know. He has been styling automobiles—along with a host of other things—for more than 20 years. Before that Walker, a former rubber-factory worker and professional football player, designed women's gowns, shoes, handbags and hats. More recently he helped design the 1949 Ford car which won a citation for Ford and Walker in the fashion academy award. Now he is consultant on the styling of all Ford products, including Ford, Mercury and Lincoln cars and commercial units. Walker, born in Chicago a little more than 50 years ago, played football with Jim Thorpe's

Canton Bulldogs and Cleveland Panthers in 1923 and 1924. At the same time he was getting retainers as a fashion designer. An ardent apostle of "efficiency of design," he says the time never should come when automobile styling will have reached its limit. "Just as research opens new fields to the automobile engineer, so it does for the automobile stylist." Walker says the motor car has about reached its maximum width and minimum height. But that doesn't mean that its lines can't be changed for greater eye appeal and greater comfort. The Walker influence can be seen in most of today's automobiles, even if he didn't style all of them. He had a large part in ridding the automobile of the trunk that in the early '30's was bolted on the rear. He made it an integral part of the vehicle.

KROL SPARKS ARGOS TO 26-18 WIN OVER CATS—Starting Big Four's 1949 season with a bang, Toronto Argonauts exploded to a 26-18 win over Hamilton Wildcats before 12,200 football fans at Varsity Stadium in Toronto. Star of day was Argos' big Joe Krol, who outpassed, outran and outkicked his opponents and teammates to account for 20 of his team's 26 points. Here Argo man is seen being tagged by a Wildcat player during first half of game.

Egg-Cultured Vaccine to Protect Cattle

Eradication of rinderpest, the disease which kills some 2,000,000 farm animals every year is now a practical possibility, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), reports. During the war American and Canadian scientists discovered that by growing the virus inside hen's eggs, speedy mass production of rinderpest vaccine is possible. Here, a FAO technician is seen harvesting egg membranes rich in rinderpest virus.

NEAR-MISS IN CHEMICAL DISCOVERY DELAYED HEALING ART GENERATION

By ALTON L. BLAKESLEE
NEW YORK (AP)—In 1908 a German chemist made a new chemical, then stuck it away in a laboratory safe. It lay gathering dust for 25 years, until in 1933 another German scientist took a look at it. Two years later he announced discovery of prontosil, first of the amazing sulfo drugs. Prontosil was the chemical made in 1908. It is one of the classics in stories of near-misses in medical research. By a hair's breadth, scientists have dismissed recognizing drugs that could have saved millions of lives if they had been put to use earlier. Prontosil was one of the hundreds of chemicals made when Paul Ehrlich was seeking his magic bullets to kill germs. Why it was never put to a test is a mystery, Dr. Boris Sokoloff writes in a new book, "The Miracle Drugs." (Zig-Zag Co.).

Rediscovered in 1935, prontosil was the springboard for chemical research that brought on sulfanilamide, sulfapyridine, sulfathiazole and other sulfa drugs that fought certain infections like no other drugs ever had. In the Second World War, the sulfa drugs were one of the reasons why 97.3 percent of all wounded United States servicemen survived. Sir Alexander Fleming discovered penicillin in 1928. Mold spores floating in the air got onto agar plates on which he was growing bacteria. One mold produced this chemical that fought powerfully against the germs. He kept working at his discovery but it attracted little attention. It took a war to get penicillin born. Scientists took up the
