blackness of night. As far as humanly possible, the long lines of cars winding through the mountains must be made invisible. Here was a job calling for resourcefulness, watchfulness, and ingenuity to say nothing of co-operation by everybody.

Remember the armored cars that kept coming into and going out of Prince Rupert through the long weeks when people confused steamship whistles with sirens and now and then a fellow would remark he hated to feel jittery. The armored cars, the purposeful gun crews and sleek weapons looked like bad medicine for any wandering fliers from Tokio. The artillery had a far longer range than anyone in town thought — not that information was ever given, but because the guy around the corner had been tipped off by a friend of his that so and so didn't have the least doubt of it.

Tens of thousands of United States troops, by the time they stepped off the trains at Port Edward or Prince Rupert had a widened idea of America, and that Canada is a roomy sort of place. Many were from away down south — and they spoke with an easy drawl. They were likeable, genial boys, full of unspoken questions and not overlooking much. Some had not been beyond their own State, and all had come a long way.

Railroad men, like all other loyal workers and citizens, shouldered a never ending list of responsibility and anxieties. Emergencies had to be met and solved. Ever present would be need for judgment and discretion. Prince Rupert and this end of the vast railway system grew swiftly in international importance, as Washington discovered what was here. And it is distinctly to the credit of everyone concerned that not once was there an "incident" here. There was a smoothness, efficiency and finality.

The Prince Rupert Optimist, dated July 16, 1909, announces that it has a name, the competition having ended with the choice favoring what was submitted by J. H. Pillsbury, and the presentation to him of the prize — a $25 gold watch. Other names suggested included the "Leader," "Enterprise," "Star," "Hyacinthe" (from a lady in California) "Dreadnought" and "Wediddahid."

With the time for the annual Rod and Gun Club dinner coming around again, it is seemingly to arise and tell the assembled company that once upon a time, one could penetrate the everlasting hills around Prince Rupert and drill an unsuspecting, savory mountain goat. You might do it today but with heavy odds. Civilization is nearer.

The defence idea must have been in the mind of the powers that be, quite early in the history of Prince Rupert. As far back as midsummer 1909, five years before there was any thought of war in Europe, military men came here to take a look around. These included General W.D. Otter, who took the first Canadian contingent to South Africa, Col. Rutherford of Ottawa, a naval lieutenant and a captain from India. They spent a day on the harbor, and a week in the district. The general was interviewed. They were in the north on pleasure bent. Fishing was fair! An interesting visit! Beautiful scenery. Defence? Oh yes! No, nothing today!

More persons, returning to Alaska or Prince Rupert after visiting in the south or east, are saying "so glad to be back." It would be interesting to know how much of this is polite fiction or is honestly meant! If the former, there is no harm done. Perhaps, after all, language was invented to help conceal a great many of one's real thoughts.

"Please don't bother—I think it will be all right to just flick them on the floor."

Reminiscences
By W.J. and Reflections

Prince Rupert folk were blessed with steady nerves back in the days of '41, and after, when Pearl Harbor spoke. The air and ocean fleets of Japan were ranging the Pacific. Two of Britain's proudest ships had been sunk. The assumed impregnable fortress of Singapore had fallen. Here, we slumbered more or less vocally and rejoiced in the sudden spurt of business, the abundance of jobs and the handsome wages.

race, steel had spanned wide rivers and deep gulches. Between Prince Rupert and Terrace? What distance was that to a bomber? There were targets that meant far-reaching destruction.

Railroaders had their orders. The transcontinental, in particular the Pacific zone, realized the menace. A first and vital essential was silence. No talk, no matter how unimportant or innocent it might seem, anywhere, any time, must be rigidly recognized. War had come and alert, unfriendly ears were liable to be anywhere.

Japan made it her business to know something of the railway out of Prince Rupert. It was realized that a few well placed bombs would isolate this port as far as rail traffic was concerned. Between here and Terrace, steel had spanned wide rivers and deep gulches. Between here and Terrace, the transcontinental, in particular the Pacific zone, realized the menace. A first and vital essential was silence. No talk, no matter how unimportant or innocent it might seem, anywhere, any time, must be rigidly recognized. War had come and alert, unfriendly ears were liable to be anywhere.

Lights on a train—any train—could no longer pierce the

What a tragedy! The great majority of crippled children can be completely corrected, yet some are condemned to a life of incapacity due to lack of hospital and treatment facilities. Let's help these children! Let's provide facilities in B.C. on such a scale that not a single sick or crippled child can say in after life: "I didn't have a chance!"
