Three Canadian Destroyers Set For Part In Port Day

The Royal Canadian Navy established a premature beachhead at Prince Rupert Tuesday after giving up one on the Queen Charlotte Islands where weather and remoteness made the prospect of invasion entirely uninviting.

The flotilla of three destroyers, Cayuga, Athabaskan and Crescent, made a quick run from Virago Sound at the north end of Graham Island and slipped into Prince Rupert harbor shortly before noon—24 hours before their scheduled arrival.

They are here to take part in Port Day and have been away from their base at Esquimalt since August 16. The 500 men aboard the three ships are mostly R.C.N. The season is so late that few reservists made the cruise.

Their arrival here was virtually unobserved because of a pall of rain that shrouded the harbor, giving the vessels an indefinite outline as they slipped in with Athabaskan, commanded by Commander J. S. Davis in the lead.

They will remain anchored in the harbor for the duration of their visit, according to Commander O. G. S. Robertson of the Cayuga, senior officer of the flotilla, because the large rise and fall of the tides here make it difficult to moor the low-built ships alongside the wharfs.

At 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Commander Robertson, Commander Davis and Lieut.-Commander John Charles of the Crescent paid a formal visit to Mayor Nora Arnold at the City Hall. The call was returned later in the day by Mayor Arnold, who visited Cayuga.

Cruise of the vessels was relatively uneventful, except for the sequel to landing operation at Naden Harbor. The vessels put two companies of men, numbering 150, ashore in the harbor. They marched with full pack to the head of the harbor, where they were taken aboard again.

However, the small boats put out toward the beach at low tide and some were damaged on shoals and rocks before they returned to the ships.

"That is why we are short of small boats to take liberty parties ashore," smiled Commander Robertson.

The tug Marysville, of H.M. C.S. Chatham was loaned for liberty use by Lieut. John Quinn, executive officer of the naval reserve station here.

By anchoring in the harbor, the three destroyers will be able to put on a really spectacular rocket display on the evening of Port Day, which they would not be able to do if they were tied at the wharves, Commander Robertson said.

Plans for the navy's participation in Port Day were discussed by the commanding officers and S. G. Furk, Port Day chairman, at a conference at Chatham Saturday afternoon. Commander Robertson was one of the leading figures in the rescue operations of refugees during the Fraser River floods last May and June.

"On the whole, it was pretty gruesome, but it had its amusing parts," he recalled.

The three destroyers were anchored at Virago Sound during the storm on Monday night and Tuesday. They decided that since it was impossible to hold training exercises, they might just as well come to Prince Rupert. They left their anchorage at 4 o'clock yesterday morning, making the 100-mile trip in seven hours.

The Canadian destroyers will be joined by three American destroyers which are due to arrive here on Friday for a short visit.
