U.S. Soldier Still Interested in City

Jerre J. Haffield, who was stationed at Prince Rupert during the war with 262nd. M.P. Company of the United States Army and now at Vero Beach, Florida, identified with the American Fruit Growers, a large citrus fruit marketing organization in Florida which turns out the famous "Blue Goose" variety, has not lost interest in this city. After five years, he writes to the Daily News saying that he still cherishes many fond memories of the stay here, of "the many grand people here and of Prince Rupert's hospitality in general." He asks for a few copies of the Daily News together with pictures and literature of the city and surrounding territory. Among others he sends regards to Johnny Comadina.

"It is my hope," says Mr. Haffield, "that before too many years I may return to Prince Rupert and perhaps on to Alaska on a vacation trip."

There are numerous dogs roaming the district, and a drive is starting to see that every tike must have his owner and license, otherwise the pound will become his home.

CHEERFUL ROBINS ARE SEEN HERE

Robins, in Prince Rupert this spring appear numerous, look plump and sound cheerful. The birds came early and, if they miss warm and sunny weather there seems no indication of being downcast. The other morning, no fewer than eight were counted on two small trees, five on one and three on the other. This was in the neighborhood of the Canadian National general offices.

Clarence Dixon sailed yesterday afternoon on the Coquitlam for a trip to Vancouver.
