Far Eastern Policy

WHILE Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, in spite of the recession of his prestige, is appearing in the picture again in Nationalist China, Secretary of State Dean Acheson of the United States and Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin of Great Britain are billed to discuss possible development of anti-communist bloc countries in southeast Asia.

There is little use now in looking back at the vacillations of the Americans and the weaknesses of the Chiang leadership in Nationalist China which have been conducive to the rise of communism in China. Possibly even yet American, and to lesser extent British, policy could support a strong, progressive, anti-Communist leadership in China when such leadership exists but it cannot create it when it is non-existent.

Now, as Nationalist resistance dwindles, the victorious Communists are faced with forecasts of the greatest famine of the century following the gigantic floods and dislocations of this year. Their bold plans and promises will be put to a severe test. If they fail colossally as the self-appointed leaders of the revolutionary drive for a more abundant life, the revolution will in time grind them down as it has ground down the Nationalists.

Shall western policy by renewed aid to the discredited Nationalist remnant help the latter—through its blockade of coastal ports for instance—to swell the accumulating miseries of the masses, hoping thus to bring chaos down on the Communists? Or would such a policy divert the wrath of the people from their Communist masters to American "imperialism" and its Nationalist "running dogs"?

The answer to this dilemma must rest on moral as well as pragmatic grounds. To fight communism in China, it is necessary above all else to have a vital alternative leadership for the people to turn to. The finding and fostering of such leadership must be a continuing aim of western policy.

THE NEW HOTEL

FOR WEEKS, following the original announcement some time ago, there had been much interest in developments in regard to the new Sir Charles M. Hays project for Prince Rupert. It was, therefore, satisfactory to read the assurance of Frank Kafel, Toronto financier, who is the moving spirit of the project, that it is going ahead just as rapidly as possible.

With Prince Rupert's already new growth, the expansion of city and district which it is conceded on all hands is immediately in store and the seemingly tremendous possibilities of stop-over business if adequate and suitable accommodation is available, augmentation of hotel facilities at Prince Rupert are long overdue.

It is quite possible that even the new hotel will soon find itself in the position of being inadequate to meet the needs of the growing city and that already existing facilities will continue to be hard pressed as they usually are today.

Additional theatre service will also be in line with the requirements of the general growth and advancement of Prince Rupert.

Send Off To Applewhaite

Member-Elect Meets With Local Association Before Leaving For Ottawa

Prince Rupert Liberal Association gave a send-off last night to E. T. Applewhaite, M.P.-elect for Skeena, prior to his departure for Ottawa to attend his first session of Parliament. Mr. Applewhaite leaves tomorrow afternoon on the Princess Norah for the Capital with brief stops in Vancouver and Nelson en route.

The member-elect received words of sage counsel from Olof Hanson who spoke from the experience of sixteen years in Parliament and was also given suggestions of certain matters which it was felt should be pressed upon for immediate action such as the installation of the breakwater for the Fairview fishermen's floats, the completion of the road to those floats, improvement of radio service to Prince Rupert and central British Columbia and an airplane landing field at Prince Rupert.

The general consensus was, however, that, if anybody had a grasp of the problems and needs of this district, it was Mr. Applewhaite himself and little advice was, therefore, required by him.

Mr. Applewhaite asked for the views of the Association on the matter of rent control and, after some discussion, a resolution was passed favoring the continuation of the existing type of control with certain modifications and the establishment of a representative of the board of appeal at Prince Rupert. (At present control affects only tenants who are not moving, there being no ceiling for new tenants or new property).

Mr. Hanson counselled Mr. Applewhaite, on arrival at Ottawa, to "listen, get friends and co-operate." By that means, accomplishment could be achieved. It had been his (Mr. Hanson's) experience that, if a solid case was put up, supported by facts and backed by the people concerned, fair requirements would be met. "Do what is right and don't get excited and you will be member as long as you want to," declared Mr. Hanson who urged the importance of such bodies as the Chambers of Commerce, the Boards of Trade and the home riding associations keeping the member posted and advised as to needs and requirements.

Mr. Applewhaite expressed his sincere thanks and appreciation for the support at home which had resulted in his election.

"I am going to miss the atmosphere of these home town meetings," he admitted. "I suppose I shall be a very small load in a large sea at Ottawa. I know I have a hard man to follow in Olof Hanson but I am conscious of the responsibility and will face the job with humility. It is going to be a real job of work, I know."

While he warned against passing resolutions just for the sake of passing resolutions, Mr. Applewhaite, nevertheless, suggested that it was the duty of the Association to see that the needs of the riding were brought at all times to the attention of the member with well-founded representations having in mind the interests not only of local district but the country as a whole.

U.N. Observers in Action

With civil strife continuing in Greece, United Nations military observers teams continue their tedious, often dangerous jobs of watching the country's northern frontiers to make sure that there is no illegal interference on the part of Greece's neighbors. This group of U.N. observers was photographed near Aghia Paraskevi.
