TO RAISE CATTLE IN AFRICA NOW

LONDON— British scientists have found a new drug for cattle which is believed will make Africa the world's biggest meat supplier. It will prevent or cure the sleeping sickness carried by the dreaded tsetse fly. Discovery of the drug—antrycide—has been announced by Colonial Under Secretary D. R. Rees-Williams. An area of 4,500,000 square miles in Africa, hitherto deadly to man and beast because of sleeping sickness, will be made safe for cattle raising.

Sport Shots

The flat-race jockey's off-season bogy—the threat of accumulating poundage around the waistline—leaves British champion jockey Gordon Richards undisturbed. Gordon, Britain's ace jockey with regularity distressing to his colleagues during the last two decades, has found his keep-fit medicine in winter sports at St. Moritz. He finds it the best build-up for a strenuous racing season, though maybe it adds a little adipose tissue. "I always do in the winter," he said, "but it will come off again quite easily when I go into training for the season."

As conscientious as he was 20 years ago, Gordon prefaces each opening of the flat season with three weeks' serious preparation, which includes plenty of early-morning road work, exercises and right diet. It's his formula for starting the season fighting fit. Even so, riding six races daily, he finds he often loses as much as three and a half to four pounds. That is adjusted by saddles of varying weights if his horses all are required to carry the same.
