FIND LITERARY RELIC IN SHIPS' GRAVEYARD

NEW YORK (AP)—A relic of Joseph Conrad's seafaring days is on its way to its last port. The teakwood wheel of the iron-hulled barque Otago, first command of the Polish captain who became one of Britain's foremost authors, is being shipped to a London museum.

During Conrad's later years—the 25th anniversary of his death was observed earlier this month—he did not know of the existence of any Otago relic. He thought she had disappeared without trace.

But authors Christopher Moseley and William Stanley Hall accidentally discovered the hulk of the sailing vessel in a ships' graveyard in the Derwent River, Tasmania.

Hall went below decks to the after cabin. There he found the eight-spoked wheel among rubbish, rotted canvas and abandoned gear.

The weather-beaten wheel, now 80 years old, was sent to New York. From here it will go to England in the wheelhouse of the liner, Media. Then it will be turned over to Sir David Bone, oldest surviving sailor-friend of Conrad, for delivery to the Honorable Company of Master Mariners which has a maritime museum aboard a ship moored in the Thames.

Conrad wrote of the Otago in "The Shadow Line," "The Secret

Sharer" and "A Smile of Fortune." He once referred to the wheel as a "symbol of mankind's claim to direct its own fate."

Indian Superintendent F. E. Anfield returned to the city Thursday afternoon by air from Vancouver after attending the general Synod of the Church of England in Canada at Halifax.

Highway Will Boost Fraser Valley Town

HOPE, B. C. (AP)—The sleeping princess awaiting the touch of the prince's magic kiss could have a modern parallel here in this town in the lower Fraser Valley.

Founded more than 100 years ago as a Hudson's Bay fort, Hope has been stirring restlessly in recent years. Its full awakening may come when the "magic kiss" is applied with the opening of the $12,000,000 Hope-Princeton highway.

Tourist traffic will flow east through here enroute to the Okanagan and the Kootenays. Tourists from eastern points will be able to make a six-hour drive from the Okanagan to the coast.

W. A. Trout, president of the board of trade, says Hope had only a population of 500 four years ago. Today it has 2,500. "Hope will continue to expand, now that the new route is about to be opened," he predicted.

WRESTLES BEAR TO SPLIT DECISION—When Fernand Therrien, North Bay, Ont., farmer, saw a bear leap at him from bushes on his farm lot, he instinctively clubbed the animal with a .22 calibre rifle. The bear fell away, Therrien shot him in the head, but then found himself clawed and bruised as the animal came back for more. After 20 minutes, Therrien broke free, ran for help, but could find no trace of bruin on his return. Here he shows the rifle broken in the struggle.

HATS TAKE TO AIR

RADLETT, Hertfordshire, Eng. (AP)—Hat fashions proved almost as interesting as airplanes at a recent model aircraft rally here. One boy wore a skull-cap trimmed with propeller and wind-sock, another boy wore a tam with a wind-sock for a tassel and his girl friend had a propeller mounted on her straw boater.
