WE CAN'T ALL BE SKIPS

Do not envy the exalted position of the skip. Many curlers during their initiation years with the "besom and stane" secretly nourish the desire to don the mantle of authority vested in the skip as lord and master of his team.

The irksome sojourn of a lowly lead is not quite as unprofitable as it may sound, because the difference between a good lead and a good skip is sometimes very small.

An expert lead man becomes a master of draw weight. He gets the range with his draws in uncanny fashion. The same unhesitating accuracy with finger-tip control of his weight is the chief requisite in a good skipper. Therefore I state without hesitation that you will have a better than average chance of becoming a top-notch skip if you remain as a lead-off man on a rink for several years. As a lead, you start the offensive play of your team and a team is only as strong as its weakest man. Personally, if given a choice, I would much rather have a strong lead and a weak second man than the reverse.

Think back a moment. Remember that five-ender you scored a while back? Perhaps your skip mistakenly took credit for itbut recall the first stone. You played an in-turn draw nicely to the side of the house where there was a tricky run in the ice. Your opposition missed . . . then you drew perfectly to the other side . . . another miss . . . and . . . who scored the five-ender? . . you, the lowly lead started that and you can take the credit, whether your skip had to make a difficult shot with his last rock or not. You started the big end, and what's a skipper for if he can't finish it?

(Miss Brash)

But bridge players are people and bridge is an exciting game of wits: In this column I merely report what happens and I would not be giving a true picture if I reported that all players followed the above proprieties completely at all times. Surely you must know from your own games that now and then a player who wouldn't dream of taking unfair advantage of his opponents lets a loud double slip in or possibly directs an angry glance at his partner. I am not condoning any deviation from the absolute in ethical play. In my game deviations do occur, although not often. They will continue to occur unless the game is given up by human beings and played exclusively by passionless automatons.

Of course I realize that there is a very small minority of players who follow the practice of bidding and playing their cards with special emphasis and with conscious intent to defraud their opponents. The only defence against such players is simply not to play with them.

In today's deal Mr. New could not keep the elation out of his voice when he doubled five diamonds. What more could he ask for, holding three sure (?) winners against his vulnerable opponents? As it happened, Mr. Champion was not impressed with the loudness of the double. He just took the action warranted by his own cards. Holding no defensive values, he went on to five spades. As you see, he was right as usual, because Miss Brash would have wrapped up 11 tricks in diamonds. BLONDIE
