Brig. Bogert Gets Top Spot At Ottawa

OTTAWA (CP)—Brig. M. P. Bogert, a cultivated soldiering gentleman who built a quality brigade and put ginger in a static front in his year in Korea, is going to take over a senior position at army headquarters in Ottawa now that he is back.

He will be deputy adjutant-general, a post being revived to bring help to the staffs wrestling with the administrative, human and personnel problems of a small, 48,000-man army with commitments in 3 continents.

To it he will bring a long army experience freshened by a year in command of the 25th Brigade on a Korean front which he says has proved Canadian Army training to be on the right road, has helped it perfect the nucleus of a good future army, given a proving ground for new Canadian wrinkles and provided experience in co-operating as part of international armies.

Neither colorful nor reserved, no seeker after easy popularity with his soldiers, he is very much the regular soldier's commander.

His edition of the 25th Brigade, Brig. Bogert says, marked "the first time we have gone to war with regular soldiers."

"They regard the army as a career, are more amenable to discipline than the wartime volunteer and therefore can be disciplined more easily. He defines "discipline" as "alert response to orders."

"They are more dependent on their officers. If an officer is good here he has more scope and gets more respect.

"We've learned a lot about handling men like that and should be perfecting the nucleus of a good regular army."

"Korea," he says, "has helped us recapture some of the techniques of the defence which had been lost since no one had really practised them since the First World War."

He had confidence in the officers on the spot. "If you have them, you shouldn't have them," he says.

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

Take Out Trumps early
If Ruff Play Looms

When you suspect that a defender may be able to get in a ruff, it is very commendable to try and take out trumps as quickly as possible. However, in many situations there are other things you must do to protect yourself.

In today's hand, for example, Mr. Masters and Mr. Dale got into the right final contract of five diamonds. They could have made the "easier" contract of three no trump on the expected heart opening, but would have been set at that bid if Mr. Abel had decided to open a club.

Against five diamonds, Mr. Abel laid down the queen of hearts. Now Mr. Masters could have won this trick in either hand. A careless analysis would indicate that it made no difference where he won it.

But of course Mr. Masters is not a careless player. He had heard Mr. Abel overcall in hearts and therefore Mrs. Keen must be short in the suit. He had to let the enemy in with the ace of trumps. If Mr. Abel held the ace of trumps, another heart lead from his might, and probably would, be ruffed by Mrs. Keen.

That would not necessarily be fatal to the success of the contract provided Mrs. Keen did not ruff out the ace of hearts.

On this reasoning, Mr. Masters played the ace of hearts on the first trick. He then led a diamond and Mr. Abel won and returned the jack of hearts. Mrs. Keen ruffed as expected. But Mr. Masters merely dropped the trey—which was always a loser anyway.

If the first trick had been won

TB Problem In Alaska Said Tragically

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Widespread tuberculosis in Alaska and other Pacific areas stands as an indirect threat to the health of people in the United States, a leader in the fight against the disease reported here.

Another cause for concern, Dr. Howard W. Bosworth told the National Tuberculosis Association, is that the number of people who contract the disease is not decreasing, even in the United States itself.

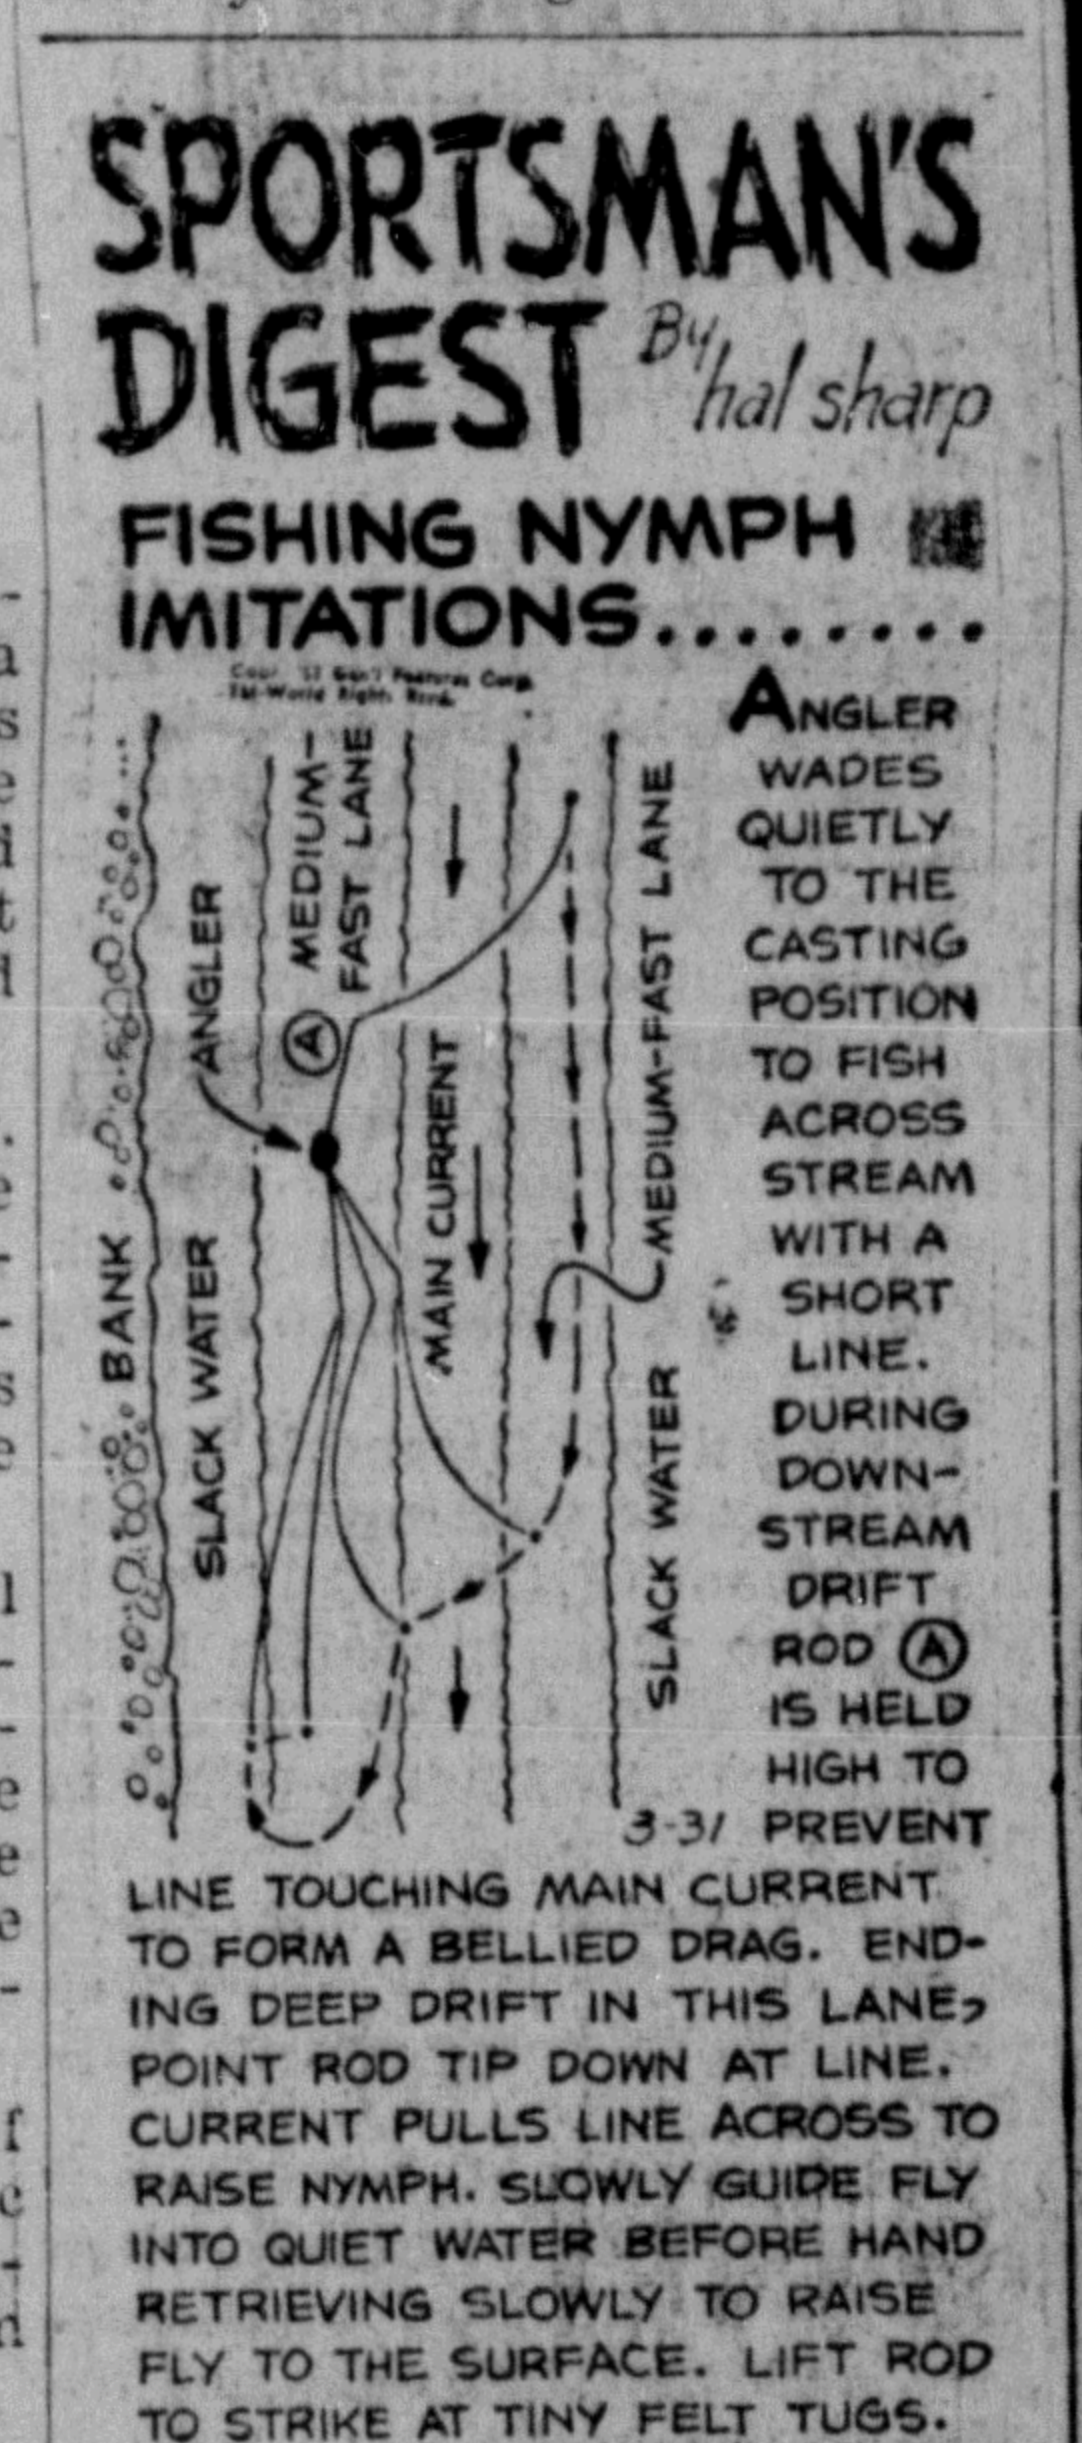

Dr. Bosworth, who is medical director of Bosworth Sanitarium, Los Angeles, said the increasing travel between the United States proper and the Philippines makes people here subject to exposure from without.

Dr. Edward T. Blomquist, of the Public Health Service Arctic health research centre at Anchorage called the TB problem in Alaska tragic.

Among the natives the death rate from TB is 600 for every 100,000 persons, among the whites there, only 37.2 per 100,000.

In sections where the native population is exclusively Eskimo one out of every 10 persons has active or probably active tuberculosis. At present there are only 600 hospital beds for tuberculosis in the territory, but an increase to 900 beds is planned by 1954.
