BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD
Loser-on-Loser Is Win Play

Of all the "fancy" plays in bridge, the most glamorous is undoubtedly the squeeze. But a poor relation in the field of fine plays is of more practical value—and is overlooked constantly.

I refer to the loser-on-loser play. Many players who can talk pretty intelligently about squeezes would find it hard to recognize and execute the loser-on-loser device.

South in today's hand was not one of these. After making only a simple overcall on his good hand, he took a shot at game after hearing his partner's free raise.

West opened the queen of diamonds and the king in the closed hand won. South saw that he had to lose a spade, a heart and very probably two clubs, since clubs had been bid and rebid on his left. How would you play the hand?

Well, South figured he had a chance if he could keep his right-hand opponent out of the lead so that a club could not be led through his king.

If East had the ace of spades, this would be impossible. If East had both outstanding heart honors, it would still be very difficult. But not impossible.

South played as follows: At trick two he led a trump and West took the ace. The jack of diamonds was returned and won on the board with the ace.

The four of hearts was led and South killed East's queen with the ace. Dummy was entered with a trump and the nine of diamonds was led. Here South discarded his jack of hearts which was a loser anyway.

But this put West in the lead with no good return. He could cash the ace of clubs but that was all. Nothing could prevent South from pulling the 10 of hearts through East, ruffing out the king and setting two good hearts on the board for club discards.

South simply lost a diamond to West rather than a heart to East. A small thing—the contract depended on it.

SAILOR FALLS 14 FEET WHILE HANGING CLOTHES

VANCOUVER (C)—A Vancouver sailor found out that hanging out the wash can be just as hazardous as climbing the rigging in a heavy sea.

Stewart Harris, 35, fell 14 feet down a light well while clothespinning a few shirts on a line. He was steadying himself on a narrow ledge as he leaned from a window when the ledge gave way. Harris suffered assorted bruises and sprains.
