BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

MUZZY ONLY THOUGHT HE CONTROLLED TRUMPS

One thing (or perhaps I had better say another thing) Mr. Muzzy finds it hard to understand is the matter of trump control.

In today's deal Mr. Champion was furious when his opponents breezed right into four hearts against his powerful hand.

He led the king of spades and got madder than ever when Mr. Muzzy promptly spread his cards on the table and claimed his contract.

"Give you the first trick and the ace of trumps and the ace of clubs," he announced grandly. Turning to the kibitzers, he added: "Not everybody would have bid my hand again."

"And everybody would have got a better result than you're going to get," snarled Mr. Champion. "Play cards, stupid."

"What are you going to take?" asked Mr. Muzzy angrily as he picked up his cards. "Go ahead and lead."

CANTERBURY, England (C)—The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, said in a broadcast: "We are all familiar with the people who are always worrying. At the opposite end are the people who do not seem to worry about anything. Between them, they do a great deal of damage."

DAZED

Mr. Champion did lead. He continued spades. Mr. Muzzy ruffed and led a trump. It won. He led another trump and Mr. Champion took the ace.

Out came another spade and Mr. Muzzy ruffed again. At this point he had the lone king of trumps in his hand and the lone queen on the board. And there was still a trump in Mr. Champion's hand.

If he started to run diamonds, Mr. Champion would ruff the second lead, and his ace of clubs would complete the set. Playing in a daze now, Mr. Muzzy took out the last trump and then cashed four diamond tricks.

THROUGH

After that he was through. When he led a club, Mr. Champion took the rest of the tricks with the ace of clubs and good spades.

Always ready with an alibi, Mr. Muzzy pointed out that he thought he had a six-card suit in hearts.

"Don't give us that stuff," remarked Mr. Champion. "If you believed you had six-hearts, you'd probably have reached a slam."
