IT'S A WARM, HAPPY WONDERFUL PICTURE!

TOTEM PLAYING MONDAY TO SATURDAY
A FAMOUS PLAYERS THEATRE 7:00 and 9:15

REPUBLIC'S powerful romantic dramatization of the Maurice Walsh story, "The Quiet Man," filmed in Technicolor and starring John Wayne and Maureen O'Hara, is steeped in Irish tradition through its native Irish cast, but none is so rooted in the "craic sod" as that twinkly-eyed dean of the acting profession, Barry Fitzgerald.

Barry, appearing in the whimsical role of the marriage broker in "The Quiet Man," which opens an engagement at the Totem Theatre on Monday, never repeats a performance and in recent pictures has played a ship's cook, a tram conductor, an impeccable race track enthusiast, a grape grower, a wealthy playboy, a country doctor, a tombstone sculptor and a male nurse to a nitwit.

It was in 1944 that he won an Academy Award as the best supporting player of the year for his portrayal of a priest in "Going My Way."

An easy-going, stocky man with twinkling blue eyes, light brown hair and a lantern jaw, Fitzgerald was born in Dublin, Ireland, on March 10, 1888. His real name is Shields and his father was a columnist on the Dublin Evening Telegraph. He attended the Merchant Tailors' and Skerrys College, and upon graduation from Skerrys, Barry entered the Irish Civil Service. But through a casual acquaintance, he saw his first play from the wings. That was the turning point in Barry's life.

We've had a word from Ireland that the QUIET MAN'S comin' around so make sure you drop in to ART MURRAY'S as he'll head there when he hits town.
