

Products Derived Treatment of Wood

At our plant on Watson Island we obtain cellulose by literally cooking the wood," Dr. Weyman explained. "This is a chemical which comprises about half the wood content. It is a vital ingredient of many industrial products. One of the first of these to be discovered was nitro-cellulose, a derivative which was developed as an explosive. Celluloid is merely processed cellulose, and the same chemical goes into the manufacture of billiard balls and films."

Dr. Weyman said that cellulose-acetate, a derivative which is produced at the Watson Island plant, can be turned into yarn so fine that it still astonishes those responsible for its manufacture. This is a process which is carried out at the company's new plant in Edmonton.

"Although we are concerned primarily with the production of cellulose, we are interested in the other half of wood and are very conscious that failure to use it represents a waste of forest resources," Dr. Weyman said. "We are, however, conducting extensive research to remedy the situation."

One product that can be obtained from the other half is alcohol. Another is vanilla which, in turn, can be developed into an antiseptic used for sterilizing canned foods.

Dr. Weyman pointed out that sugar also can be manufactured from wood. He recalled that some time ago there was a report that a plant was to be located near here for that purpose, but so far nothing seems to have come of it.

The speaker was introduced by Dr. L. M. Greene and thanked by David Radford.

Music Students In Recital Here

Presentation of a silver medal for musical prowess to Janette Spark highlighted a recital by student pianists and violinists in the Civic Centre lounge last night.

Young Miss Spark won the silver medal award from the Royal Toronto Conservatory of Music for achieving the highest marks in British Columbia in Grade 7 violin examinations. She also recently won a bursary from the Frederick Harris Music Company.

Rev. L. G. Sieber presented the medal as well as certificates to several of the students for passing exams in piano and violin.

Twenty-four students of Mrs. C. Anderson, along with four piano students of Miss Way and a Vancouver student participated in the recital heard by parents and friends.

Canada Dubious of New Plan For UK Orphan Children

LONDON (CP) - Thousands of homeless and orphaned British children would be sent to Commonwealth countries for settlement under a plan soon to be submitted for government approval.

The idea comes from the parliamentary migration board set up last year by the government. A board official said that if the plan is adopted, children from voluntary institutions and homes run by local authorities will be sent to private homes and institutions in the Commonwealth.

Costs of the children's fare, care and education would be met by the receiving country.

Canadian immigration officials said Canada would "consider any child migration scheme carefully."

They said there were two main obstacles to Canada's possible entry to the scheme:

1. Child welfare schemes are under the authority of the provinces and the federal government could not accept the children without the approval of the provinces;
2. Child welfare facilities in Canada "are already bursting at the seams."

The first Ursuline convent in Canada was completed by the French in 1642 at Quebec.
