Pro Looks at Amateur Painting

"The important difference between the amateur and the professional is to a large extent economic, instead of esthetic." This was the provocative conclusion drawn by Jacob Getlar Smith, artist, teacher and author, after judging an amateur painting competition. "I think that's why I envy the amateur. He has purity of purpose. He does not want or need to sell his work. Nearly all those paintings revealed a joyousness, a sense of wonder—qualities that every artist has in his youth, but which too often disappear as he grows up in a competitive world. The amateur never loses it. He is not plagued by the old devil of ambition which so often drives the professional to imitate successful painters, or worse, to repeat his past successes."

"Another thing, without the economic drive, the amateur can always paint freshly. One reason the professional has a hard time retaining his sense of wonder is that he has to paint to live. He has to paint when he is tired and fatigued. The amateur paints only when he feels like it—on Sundays usually. What a wonderful life!"

"As for technical proficiency—I feel the amateur's love of what he is trying to put down frequently atones for his lack of technique. It is this attitude that brings the amateur closer to men like Van Gogh, to whom technique was always less important than feeling."

"I'm not sure but that Leonardo da Vinci should be made the patron saint of amateur artists. But a fraction of his time was given to art. Consequently we have only a few paintings and drawings. Leonardo was a dilettante of genius. He was incapable of the sustained effort of the Sistine Chapel."

"So the difference between the amateur and the professional comes down to a difference of quantity, and not quality."

—From the American Artist, April, 1952.

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Versatility Is a Fine Point of Play

One mark of the fine player is his ability to see the necessity for changing his original line of play. Mr. Masters saw that necessity in today's deal. He literally "made the hand over" to suit his purposes. Before reading on, see if you can make six hearts on the North-South cards, with the deuce of spades opening.

Here is the way Mr. Masters went about it. He played the four of spades from dummy at trick one and Miss Brash won with the queen and returned the jack of diamonds.

Dummy's queen of diamonds took the second trick and two rounds of trumps were cashed. Mr. Masters saw he had just 11 winners—five hearts, three top diamonds, two clubs and a diamond ruff.

It occurred to him that if Miss Brash had as many as four clubs she could be squeezed in spades and clubs. In other words, to guard those two suits, she would have to hold onto one spade and three clubs, four cards in all.

After losing the first trick, Mr. Masters could win the next nine in hearts and diamonds. That made ten tricks in all and everybody would be down to three cards.

He therefore cashed the king of diamonds, returned to his hand with a third trump lead, played the ace of diamonds, on which a small club was discarded from dummy, then ruffed his last diamond.

At this point it was clear that Miss Brash could not have as

North dealer Both sides vulnerable
North (Mr. Champion)
S—K 9 4	H—K J 9 4	D—A 5 4 3	C—A 7 6 4
West (Mr. Abel)
S—10 5 3 2	H—8 3	D—3 7 2	C—J 10 8 2
East (Miss Brash)
S—A Q 8 7 6	H—8 2	D—J 10 9 6	C—Q 9
South (Mr. Masters)
S—J	H—A Q 10 7 6	D—A 5 4 3	C—K 5 3
The bidding:
North	East	South	West
1 C	1 S	2 H	Pass
4 H	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 D	Pass	6 H	All pass

many as four clubs because she had shown four diamonds, two hearts and, by inference, four or five spades.

If Miss Brash held spades and Mr. Abel held clubs, no squeeze would develop. Mr. Masters neatly arranged things so that Mr. Abel would have to guard both suits. He pulled the king of spades from dummy. Miss Brash covered with the ace and Mr. Masters ruffed.

Now Mr. Abel had the high spade, the 10. On the play of the last two trumps he had to hold that card to keep dummy's nine from winning. He therefore had to throw away two clubs and Mr. Masters won the last tricks in the club suit.

The Circus Has Come To Town

Horses in Prince Rupert! Dozens of them!

And crowds of children bubbling over with excitement and anticipation.

A great number of miscellaneous pieces of equipment and many men are busy assembling the pieces.

It all adds up to the circus that is being operated at the McBride Street and First Avenue.

The cry "the circus has come to town" still thrills the youngsters, and not a few of the oldersters have happy memories of the thrills they had in their young days when they thrilled to the same experience.

The horses are, of course, the hobby horses of varied colors and equally varied attitudes, as they seem to be striving to outrace one another. Some with mouths agape and every muscle straining, others taking it more easily; and some still in pieces, in the process of being assembled!

Other tents have been erected but are not open to the public, yet they have their challenge to our curiosity. So also have the brightly colored scenes promising entertainment and excitement.

The circus has come to town. Operated by Crescent Shows, it is being operated under the auspices of Prince Rupert Shrine Club, for funds to help crippled children.

Presented High Awards

VANCOUVER—A former New Westminster man with a B.Sc. from the University of British Columbia, Philip L. Matheson, now transportation engineer for the Canadian National Railways in Montreal, was among 14 members of the Engineering Institute of Canada who received awards and prizes at the institute's convention banquet in Hotel Vancouver Friday.

Two other well known Canadian engineers, Frederick V. Seibert of Edmonton, and Richard L. Weldon, O.B.E., of Montreal, received the Julian C. Smith medal for "achievement in the development of Canada." This is the highest award given by the Engineering Institute.

Four other engineers, including the late Dr. Ernest A. Cleveland, former chief commissioner of the Vancouver Water Board, were made honorary members of the institute. Dr. Cleveland's son, Dr. C. Cleveland, accepted the membership on behalf of his father. The other honorary members are John A. Allen of Edmonton; Francis W. W. Doane, of Halifax; and John G. G. Kerry of Port Hope, Ont.
