Naughty Nineties Recalled For Latest London Fashions

By MURIEL NARRAWAY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON (6)—Dresses with the romantic appeal of the naughty Nineties and the gay Twenties were swished through a London salon to tempt the 1954 glamor girl with a bark accent.

A French court might have inspired a pink, grey and gold evening gown striped like French wallpaper and styled with camisole top outlined in ruffing, corsetlet waist, straight skirt and frilled hem.

The dress was part of the first independent show given in more than five years by Angele Delanghe, who resigned from London's top dress-making society to work as resident couturier in a store owned by Canada's Garfield Weston Fortnum and Mason.

LACE EMBROIDERY

Now the Belgian-born designer is back in the competitive field in a salon in Bruton street. The highlight of the show is handmade lace embroidery worked on tulle.

The Queen's choice of lace gowns for wear on the world tour restored interest in a glamor fabric that had become a post-war back number. A hand-produced coffee lace by Delanghe in a new-old dress line is booked for New York display. With high neck, short sleeves coming almost to the elbow, the clinging lines and founcing hem, the dress might have stepped from an early talkie film. White Swiss embroidery was used in a court ball gown with crinoline skirt, its gathered tulle bustline slotted with white satin to give the impression of a lover's knot. White organza embroidered with black floral sprays was used for a short evening dress with wide skirt, cap sleeves and deep revers, tucked back to expose the throat. The skirt swirled and rippled from a wide black taffeta sash.

SMART SUMMER OUTFITS 6

There were chic, simple suits and dresses for early fall wear but most outfits were styled for a royal summer season. Un-crushable linen and cotton outfits, smart enough to catch the eye at the big race meetings, were part of a boutique collection supplying off-the-peg clothes costing 26 to 57 pounds. Couture prices started above that and mounted to three figures.

Interesting innovations included uncrushable romaine silk used in a straight dress with a 1920 flapper look.

The most daring 1920 line was a V-necked, sleeveless midnight blue taffeta, smocked from shoulders to low on the hip. Skirt flounces swept outward from hip to short evening length and a wide satin sash encircled the hips at a slant belted waist. Only the length of the skirt differed much from yesterday's styles.
