Coronation Dresses Arouse Speculation

LONDON.—Members of London's Big Ten of fashion are wondering who will land the coveted order to make dresses for next year's coronation train-bearers and canopy-bearers.

Prior to the last coronation, royal designer Norman Hartnell was summoned to the palace after Queen Mother Elizabeth had considered three of his train-bearer designs. She finally chose a ground-length gown of duchess satin embroidered in wheat-ear design.

Hartnell also made the Duchess of Gloucester's gown but Molyneux, who has retired from the fashion arena, designed dresses for the canopy-bearers and the gown worn by the Duchess of Kent.

There is speculation that Hardy Amies or Victor Stiebel, who have both made dresses for the Queen, will step into Molyneux's shoes.

The coronation gown of Queen Mother Elizabeth, worn under her robes, was made and embroidered by a firm of court dressmakers in New Bond Street. It is believed that the new Queen will follow her mother's example even to the princess styling with fitted waist and full skirt.

Old Indian teepees were made of buffalo skins, while wigwams were covered with the bark of trees.

CHILDREN benefit most of all...

by X-RAY shoe fitting

In fact, it's dangerous to have your child's shoes fitted in any other way. The tender child foot with its soft bones and pliant muscle can be compressed into almost any type of shoe. The child, feeling no pain, cannot tell if the shoe fits properly or not. That's why we insist upon fitting children's shoes by X-Ray. That's the only way we, and you, can be sure that your child's shoes will help to develop normal, healthy feet for a lifetime of foot health and comfort.
