BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mrs. Keen Wince at Partner's Bidding

Mrs. Keen closed her eyes in resignation when, after her one no trump response, Miss Brash bid all the way to five diamonds. She had all her one no trump bid promised, but with such stodgy distribution, her hand probably would take no more than two tricks at best. And if Miss Brash had held nine winners she would have opened the bidding with two diamonds.

Anyway, she lived to see the contract made by her partner's sharp, thoughtful, well-timed play.

South dealer
East-West vulnerable
(Mrs. Keen)

West (Mr. Champion) East (Mr. Abel)

South (Miss Brash) North (None)

The bidding:

1 D Pass North 1 N T East Pass

5 D All pass

Mr. Champion led the king of hearts and snorted disgustedly when Miss Brash ruffed. After taking out the opposing trumps in two leads, Miss Brash stopped to think matters over.

The controlling cards out against her were the two black kings. Even if they were both "right" she would have only 10 tricks in high cards. Apparently the only chance for 11 tricks was to finesse the queen of clubs successfully and then to find the opposing clubs divided three to three. A lot to ask—but not too much for Miss Brash.

To finesse the queen of clubs, Miss Brash had to get to the board and the only entry was the ace of spades. Suppose she led to that card, finessed the queen of clubs, cashed the ace of clubs and led a third club.

Mr. Abel just might ditch his king of clubs on the second lead of the suit so that it would be Mr. Champion who won the third round. In that case a lead through the queen of spades might be disastrous.

To take care of that possibility (and, as you see, it could have happened), Miss Brash made a beautiful lead at the fourth trick. She played the four of clubs.

Mr. Champion won with the eight and returned the ten of spades. Miss Brash could now afford to finesse the queen. It lost and a spade came back. She won with the ace and finessed the queen of clubs. When this held and clubs broke 3-3, a spade was discarded from dummy on the 13th club.
