BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Failure To Check Signal Card Costly

Mr. Muzzy led the king of spades against the four heart contract. Mr. Meek played the eight and Miss Brash the queen.

When he saw the queen, Mr. Muzzy looked wise and winked at the kibitzers. "You must think you're playing with children," he said to Miss Brash. Thereupon he laid down the ace of spades—and the opportunity of beating the contract was gone forever.

Mr. Muzzy looked puzzled when Miss Brash ruffed the second trick. "No spades?" he asked, as if he had been cheated.

Miss Brash picked up the outstanding trumps in two leads, ending on the board. She ruffed off dummy's last spade, then led the ten of clubs. Mr. Meek could take his ace anytime he wanted. When he was in with that card he could cash just one diamond.

If he returned a club, Miss Brash would discard three of her diamonds on dummy's club suit and lose one diamond at the end. On a spade return, Miss Brash would win all the remaining tricks, making five-odd. She would discard a diamond from her hand and ruff in dummy. Then her other diamonds would go off on dummy's clubs.

If Mr. Muzzy had made the most likely shift of a diamond at trick two, Miss Brash would not have had a chance. The loss of one spade, one club and two diamonds would have been automatic.

"Why play a high spade on the first trick?" asked Mr. Muzzy. "Didn't you play the eight spot or something?"

"Maybe I should carry a pocketful of deuces around just for situations like this," Mr. Meek replied. "Or maybe a large sign with foot-high letters saying 'Please Shift.'"

As you see, Mr. Muzzy could have checked his own hand and dummy, and seen every spade under the eight spot. It would have been clear, then, that Mr. Meek, far from giving a come-on, was playing the lowest spade he had. After all, he couldn't play the discouraging deuce if he didn't have it.

Psychology Applied To Protect Eyes

MONTREAL — For the first time in Canada, the Canadian National Railways is introducing a psychological approach to the industrial problem of eye protection in its program to inspire employees to be more safety-minded.

This new idea was conceived by F. W. Chittenden, director of industrial relations, Railway Appliances Company, Toledo, Ohio, during a period of blindness, and was explained by him to senior officers of the CNR at a special demonstration held here yesterday.

"Safety education must be presented in a manner that will be attractive to the public," said Mr. Chittenden. "For that reason, I have prepared my program of 'let's pretend' in the realm of make believe."

"It consists of instruction and individual kits containing a few small articles used daily in the home."

"Eighty-seven percent of all education is through the eyes," Mr. Chittenden said. "Eighty percent of all movement is controlled by the eyes. Of your five senses, I am sure there is no person who would want to give up sight before any of the other four."

He emphasized the value of eyesight by demonstrating in an experiment how, through psychological approach to the industrial problem of preventing eye injury, he creates in the worker himself the desire to wear eye protection. He believes that by creating this state of mind, the worker will have the desire to be safety-conscious in all other matters.

K. C. Kenkel, chairman of the CNR system safety committee, announced that the new safety program would be demonstrated to members of CNR shops at St. Charles and eventually, at other points on the system.

STOCKHOLM (CP) — Many Swedes plan to solve their personal problem at the Olympic Games in Helsinki this summer by sleeping on board their boats.

The Swedish lifeboat society is providing patrols for the large number of Swedish pleasure craft expected to cross the Gulf of Bothnia.
