Army Setting up Recruiting Shop

The Canadian Army has set up recruiting shop in Prince Rupert at the Legion auditorium for the next three days. Here to receive applications from new enlistees are Capt. V. H. Beecher and Staff Sergeant Fred Udell, both from Army Headquarters, Vancouver. Capt. Beecher says that Canada's Army—now the highest paid in the world—is in need of more men, especially for service in Europe, where duration of service for married men is one year. At this time, too, the Army is offering all branches of trades to qualified applicants, and former active and reserve personnel will be admitted with previous ranks at new rates of pay. Capt. Beecher and Staff-Sgt. Udell are lodged at the Prince Rupert Hotel and expect to proceed to Prince George from here. They arrived yesterday by plane.

Only about 10,000 square miles of the nearly 400,000 square miles in Egypt are irrigated.

Post Korean Operations—Indo China and Trade Front

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Power strategists of the Kremlin are plainly beginning to uncover and develop their new post-Korean war operations, although it still is too early to be sure where the emphasis will be placed.

On the one hand, Prime Minister Joseph Stalin sent a surprise New Year's message to the Japanese people which looked very much like a first move in a major use of blandishments, instead of threats, on that country in an effort to wean it away from its present close association with the United States.

Along with this went a continuation of the Kremlin's campaign to drum up European interest in a proposed East-West trade conference to be held in Moscow in the spring.

If one were to assess Kremlin intentions only on the basis of these two moves, it would seem that the politburo was embarking on an attempt to break up the western coalition by offering commercial inducements to America's major allies in both Europe and Asia.

SLIGHT COMFORT

Such a strategy would be welcome to the west in one small way. It would mean a substitution of competition in raw-material prices for a competition in the production of bullets. A cold war fought with cotton prices would be less immediately destructive and dangerous to the peace than a cold war fought with hot bullets in border wars.

However, western strategists find slight comfort in this prospect. There is no doubt that a serious Russian policy of trying to reopen East-West trade could play havoc with the North Atlantic Alliance and with the collective security system which Washington is trying to put together in the Pacific.

NEW HOT WAR

There is no certainty that this will be the next pattern of Russian strategy, since Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky at Paris renewed his unsupported charges that the United States Seventh Fleet is ferrying Chinese Nationalist troops from Formosa to Burma for an alleged attack on the bordering Chinese province of Yunnan.

This charge looks ominously like a Russian propaganda preparation for the opening of a new Cominform military operation in southeast Asia to follow swiftly on the heels of a Korean truce.

Such a move would nullify the trade offensive. But it would pose a military problem more difficult for the West to answer than even the Korean operation has been.

Times in Argentina Changing

MONTEVIDEO—For the Peron government in Argentina, the comfortable days are over. There is no more easy money; no more noisy nationalization projects to arouse popular enthusiasm, and no more drifting with the tide of accumulated prosperity from war-time neutrality.

From now on—and at least for a year—the government will face hard economic facts.

As if to prepare the Peronista ship of state for a storm, the Army has been purged, particularly at the top. So has the Peronista party. The President is taking the dominant General Labor Confederation more into his grip and declared his intention of syndicalizing the whole country. He also has begun organizing employers. Although not saying the actual word, he is really out for the Mussolini goal of a corporate State.

Another event of equal significance, is that Senora Eva Peron, the President's wife, will come back to her old desk at the Labor Department after a long illness. The Army purge, and the instructions to commissioned and noncommissioned officers to obey and abstain from politics appear partially to have restored confidence throughout the old Peronista party command.

First of all, the facts which discontent and cause anxiety: The year-end holiday period demonstrated the shortage of essentials in Argentina, even of food in a land supposed to be abundant therein. The harvests which are coming in will be the most unsatisfactory in a generation, owing to droughts and difficulties arising from Peronista concentration on industrialization. This means less exchange to pay for required imports. Inflation is accentuating all these problems.

The cost of living as in so many lands, has become the chief problem of Argentina, and President Peron knows that he has to do something about it—quickly. His special difficulty is how to solve it now that he has no more export surpluses by which he can make the foreign customers finance internal progress.

Therefore, the citizenry of Argentina whom "Juan" and "Juana" typify are now giving themselves over to speculation for the first time during the Peronista regime because they suddenly realize that Argentina itself has changed. Many years of family government, with its surprises, its handouts and its entertainments have made differences.

All during their generation, and that of their fathers before them, "Juan" and "Juana" have been brought up in the tradition of the good earth of the pampas which produced the beef, the wheat and the corn to feed them well at home and earn them good foreign money to finance their progress.

Today, they lack the old abundance with its cheapness in their own pantries, and there is an acute shortage of all that used to come from abroad, because of the dwindling exports. Government reports in inflated peso values no longer disguise the foreign trade facts.
