BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

"Strange" Play Gives Champion Contract

"Champion pulled the wrong card," Mr. Muzzy whispered gleefully to the other kibitzers. He was delighted to catch his arch-tormentor in an error. The fact was, however, that while Mr. Champion's play at trick five was an unusual and strange-looking manoeuvre, it was essential to the success of the contract.

This is what happened. Mr. Abel cashed the king and ace of hearts and led a third heart which Mr. Champion ruffed. Now the great man cashed the ace of spades. So far Mr. Muzzy would have played the South cards the same way. But he was astonished by Mr. Champion's next play, which was a small spade to dummy's nine. Looking slightly bewildered, Mr. Meek won with the jack.

Another heart lead could be trumped on the board while Mr. Champion threw a loser from his hand, so Mr. Meek returned a diamond. Mr. Champion went up with the ace, picked up Mr. Meek's two remaining trumps and dummy's club suit was good for the rest of the tricks.

Note the importance of Mr. Champion's foresight in giving up a spade trick at a time when there was still a trump in dummy. If Mr. Meek had won the third lead of spades, a heart return would have forced Mr. Champion to ruff in his own hand again, thus reducing his trumps to a smaller number than held by Mr. Meek.

Or, if Mr. Champion had taken his three top spades and then tried to run dummy's club suit, Mr. Meek would have ruffed in with his jack of spades long before Mr. Champion could have got rid of three diamonds. The defenders, then, would have been bound to win two hearts, a spade and a diamond.

"Muzzy," said Mr. Champion witheringly, "I suggest that you study what you stupidly call my 'errors' and if you can learn to make enough errors of this particular kind, your game will improve at least one hundred per cent."
