Steel Works Handed Back To Germany

BONN (AP)—The giant former Hermann Goering steel works, where German workers once rioted against Allied dismantling, Monday was formally handed back to the West German government.
The Allied High Commission announced that it was relinquishing its control over the state-owned iron-steel-coal group and entrusting to the federal German government the task of completing decartelization.
Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and other leading Germans were at the main plant at Salzgitter near Brunswick for the ceremonial opening of a new blast furnace.
Britain sent soldiers into the Salzgitter steelworks in March, 1950, to enforce dismantling of equipment defined for Greece as reparations. Protesting German workers rioted and menaced British officials. Later the Germans were allowed to keep much of the equipment by sending diesel motors to Greece as substitute reparations.
The giant enterprise was built by the Nazis in 1937 as part of the four-year economic plan preparing for war. The main company employed 393,000 persons and also absorbed many plants in Nazi-conquered Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and France.
After reductions owing to the war and Allied-ordered reorganization, the group now has a capital of 140,000,000 marks (about $33,000,000) and staff of 62,300, of whom about 40,000 are miners.

EDMONTON (CP)—Some of the testimony during a contested Supreme Court divorce case here was taken while the court made a visit to the couple's residence. At one point a witness climbed a tree at the request of legal counsel to demonstrate a point at issue.
