brother and the two negotiated a claim on rich-bearing Hunker Creek.

"We worked all winter thawing frozen ground and drilling. Then it dawned on us. You know, we had drawn the only blank in 15 miles of claims.

Adversaries there were many. Adversities there were many, says Crocker today, but he can see humor in almost every chain of events, looking backward. For instance, he tells the story of a young lad whose trail he crossed several different times in the North.

THE "KID"

Crocker met the 17-year-old youth the first time on the Queen heading for Skagway. "I found out he was broke. He got on at Tacoma and all he had was steamer fare. Well, I didn't let him go hungry."

Next, he saw the youth at Dyer, Alaska, sorting passengers' baggage at $1 an hour.

A few months later, while waiting for a party of miners to head into Atlin, Crocker heard of the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. Newspapers were a scarcity, but they were to be had. Crocker's young friend was selling them at two-bits each.

Fleet of foot, he would race miles from Skagway, over the "hump" to be the first to reach stampede camps with each shipment of newspapers from Seattle. He made his grubstake.

Still later, but in the same vicinity, Crocker again saw the "Kid." He had been held up by a shell-game artist and robbed of his grubstake. Was he complaining?

"Nope. The kid had got his money back again. He borrowed a gun, followed the sharp and held him up. Then beat it. He told me the story afterwards."

Several years went by then before Crocker was again to cross the "Kid's" trail. It happened at Nome, in 1901.

"I was still looking for gold, having found none in the Atlin country. I'd heard they were digging gold on the beaches at Nome."

On his arrival, Crocker thought he heard a familiar

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

When Sluff and Ruff Can't Help Declarer, Let Him Have It

"That was a close one," remarked Mr. Abel as Mr. Dale racked up 10 tricks in today's deal.

"If you had just played cards it wouldn't have been close," replied Mr. Champion, acidly. "It would have been set."

Here's the way the hand started out. Mr. Champion led the ace of clubs, noted his partner's eight spot and continued a club. Mr. Abel took two more tricks in the suit. Then, after some thought, he led the nine of diamonds.

NOTHING TO IT

Mr. Dale won with the ace, cashed the ace of trumps and successfully finessed the queen of spades. Next he led the jack of hearts from the board and let it ride after Mr. Abel failed to cover. There was nothing to it after that. The king of trumps picked up the queen and there was still a trump on the board to take care of the six of diamonds.

Mr. Champion said the hand could be defeated no matter how Mr. Dale played. Do you see how?

"Just play your last club at the fourth trick, Abel," he said, in a tone that indicated the play was simplicity itself.

ONLY HOPE

"What, and give him a sluff and a ruff?" Mr. Abel replied. "Look," Mr. Champion continued, "the man bids hearts and diamonds. He had already shown up with three clubs. He couldn't have more than two spades. You saw the ace-queen of spades on the board. Since you didn't have the king, he didn't have any spade losers. So a sluff and a ruff wouldn't help him."

"Your only hope," Mr. Champion went on, "was to try and build up a trump trick. Lead the fourth club and we'll beat him. If he trumps it with the king of hearts, we obviously will win a trump trick."

voice—loud and stentorian. He looked, and sure enough, it was the kid "spelling" through a megaphone for the passenger ship which was to leave that evening for Trisco.

"After we finished exchanging pleasantries, I asked him if he ever ran into that shell-game artist who had held him up."

"Well, he told me the shark was the first one to greet him when he hit Nome."

"Come and grabbed my hand like an old friend," the kid said, "and asked if I needed any money." The gambler was dealing faro in a saloon then owned by Tex Rickard, later well known in the U.S. as a fight promoter.

MARRIED AT DAWSON

Crocker married his wife Alice in Dawson City a few years later. She was one of the first white women to land at Juneau and in her own words, "slung hash half-ways across the Yukon." She was among the first passengers to board the initial run of the Yukon and White Pass Railroad to cook for mining camps.

Mrs. Crocker is 92—sixteen years older than her husband. Has that made any difference to their marriage? Let Mrs. Crocker speak:

"Whenever we've been together we've been happy."

The Crockers came to Prince Rupert before its incorporation in 1910. The former prospector turned his hand to engineering and carpentry, both of which he had learned a great deal through mining experience. He was prominent here for many years in labor movements and active until his health gave way several years ago due to arthritis, which has left him badly crippled in hands and legs.

But the only indication the tall, spare, old prospector gives of any misfortune is a slight, nearly concealed twinge now and then.
