BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

Bidder Risks A Double On Foe's Lack Of Skill

Bridge humanics, the art of playing the people as well as the cards, has just as important a bearing in the field of penalty doubles as it has in any other bidding situation.

In today's deal Mr. Dale would not have doubled four spades if a player like Mr. Masters had reached that contract. It is more likely that he would bid five hearts for a justifiable two-trick sacrifice.

But since Mr. Muzzy was going to play the hand, the double seemed a good bet. If the hand happened to be easily makable, not much would be lost. There was a chance that it would take a good play of some sort to make four spades and in that case, Mr. Muzzy would probably miss it.

DALE NOT SURPRISED

Mr. Dale led the deuce of hearts and was not too surprised when Mr. Muzzy ruffed. Mr. Muzzy rather liked the looks of things. What was he going to lose except a spade and a diamond? The answer to this came later.

At trick two he led a small spade to dummy's king. He returned to his hand with the ace of clubs and laid down the ace of spades. He looked even happier when Mrs. Keen followed suit for the second time.

Now it was impossible for Mr. Dale to have started with five trumps.

Next came the jack of spades and Mr. Dale won with the queen. He then made the killing return of a club. Mr. Muzzy frowned. He had not foreseen this development. He won in dummy and was there for the last time.

LEADS HIGH CLUB

He led another high club and discarded a diamond. But Mr. Dale ruffed and led back a heart. Mr. Muzzy ruffed. The best he could do was to lead a small diamond. Mrs. Keen won with the jack and fired another heart. It took Mr. Muzzy's last trump to win this trick and the rest of the tricks belonged to the enemy. Down three.

The contract could have been made with an extra trick. All Mr. Muzzy had to do was to lay down the ace of spades at trick two and follow with the jack. He should never have touched the clubs until he had the trump suit cleared.

Rivals to Submit Plans to B. C.

VICTORIA (C)—American and Canadian rivals for vast northern water rights may submit plans to the British Columbia government next month.

Lands Minister R. E. Sommers said this week the Aluminum Company of America and Frohisher Ltd., will likely submit "concrete" plans sometime in July. The two enterprises are rivals for the vast hydro-electric potential in northern British Columbia and the Yukon.
