Logical Thinking Can Give Formula For Squeeze Play

Follow Mr. Abel's thinking on this hand as he discovered, through logical and simple reasoning, one of the essential principles of the squeeze play.

The king of spades was opened and taken by dummy's ace. Surveying his prospects, Mr. Abel saw seven winners in hearts, one in spades, one in diamonds and two in clubs. Eleven in all—one short of his contract.

It looked like only a squeeze could develop that 12th trick. What about a squeeze on Mrs. Keen in clubs and spades? It would work if she had her side's only stoppers in the black suits. In the club suit, she would have to have both queen and jack or any five clubs. In spades she would have to hold both queen and jack and that seemed unlikely on the bidding and the play to the first trick. my's 10 good, or discard a club,

Mr. Abel applied the formula I have recommended to check on a squeeze. Mrs. Keen had to retain a first round winner in spades. Therefore she had hold only one card in that suit.

Cape Breton have an area of ousiness? She had to hold a third round 360 square miles. winner in clubs, which meant she had to retain three cards in that suit—a total of four cards. Now, if Mr. Abel could play out nine more tricks outside of the potential squeeze suits (spades and clubs, that would make 10 tricks played and Mrs. Keen clearly could not hold those important four cards.

Mr. Abel counted. One trick had already been played. He could win seven hearts and one diamond. But that totaled only nine and Mrs. Keen would still have her four essential cards. The squeeze would not operate. Mr. Abel thought long and hard. Finally his face brightened. He saw the answer. He had to lost one trick in any case. That loser, plus the nine tricks referred to above WOULD total 10 -and the squeeze would be on.

So at trick two Mr. Abel led a low spade from dummy and calmly discarded the five of diamonds. He won the high spade return by ruffing and cashed his hearts and the ace of diamonds. On the 10th trick Mrs. Keen either had to drop her king of spades, making dum-
