Eschew Enemy's Trumps When Trying Throw-In

Mr. Dale considered the people as well as the cards in bidding his hand today. He thought Miss Brash might have a pretty weak opening (which she did) and he also figured Mr. Muzzy's defense would be something less than brilliant. Hence he tried for a game with a bid of three spades after getting a raise from his partner, Mr. Abel, who has great faith in Mr. Dale's ability, went on to four.

This is another deal to illustrate the fact that you cannot always afford to pick up all of the enemy's trumps when you are trying to execute an elimination and throw-in play.

Mr. Muzzy led the jack of hearts and Miss Brash won with the ace and returned the suit. Mr. Dale winning with the king. Now Mr. Dale saw that he had a diamond loser and probably two club losers.

He might make the contract by eliminating the red suits from his hand and dummy and then throwing one of the opponents in with a second round of clubs. But the cards would have to be just right. That is, the opponent who won the second club lead would have to have started with no more than two clubs and no more than two trumps.

RUFFS ON BOARD

At trick three Mr. Dale led a small diamond to the king. Miss Brash won with the ace and led back a diamond. Mr. Dale won and then cashed exactly two rounds of spades, playing the ace and king.

Next he cashed another diamond trick and followed with the ace and another club. Miss Brash won the second club with the king and had nothing left but red cards. Her return was a diamond and Mr. Dale discarded his last club while ruffing on the board with the queen of spades.

If he had picked up all three of Mr. Muzzy's trumps early in the hand, Miss Brash would have been at no disadvantage at all when she was in with the king of clubs. Mr. Dale would have had to ruff her diamond or heart return and lose a club at the end.
