> The law dispossesed the British Anglo-Iranian Oil Company in 1951.

In London, the reported statement surprised official quarters. No plans for a resumption of negotiations on the Anglo-Iranian dispute have been mooted and the prospect of new talks is regarded as a distant one. The discussions between Zahedi and Loy Henderson, the United States ambassador in Tehran, about which Britain has been kept informed, have concentrated on emergency aid to Iran officials said.

The first preparatory step to resumed oil negotiations must be the restoration of diplomatic relations between London and Tehran, it is felt here. After that Britain would gladly take up the oil question again if there were hopes for settlement.
