Disinterest in Poor Hands Makes Bad Player

Watch a fine player operate and you will see that he plays his bad hands with just as much care and thought as his good hands. Maybe more.

It is natural, I suppose, to become apathetic and careless after you pick up three or four busts in succession. But the fine player realizes that he cannot hold a big hand every deal. If he did, nobody would play with him. He realizes, too, that when his opponents hold a big edge in high card, they will usually bid the hand to the hilt, going after the bonuses for game and slam.

Therefore, there is a chance to beat every contract . . . at least until declarer lays the hand down and proves otherwise. If you don't have the potential setting trick in your hand, maybe partner does have. It is your job to co-operate with partner and try to guide him in the right direction. Look how Mr. Abel overlooked a golden opportunity to beat today's contract.

Mrs. Keen opened her singleton deuce of clubs and dummy's ace won. Mr. Abel woefully played the trey. Now Mr. Dale led a diamond from the board and played the king. Mrs. Keen won with the ace and, as you see, all she had to do now was to lead a spade to Mr. Abel's ace. He could return a club and she would ruff for the setting trick.

But unfortunately Mrs. Keen was not equipped with X-ray eyes. She had no way of knowing which major suit ace Mr. Abel held or, for that matter, whether he had an ace at all. After long thought she came out with a heart and Mr. Dale won, picked up the last trump and got rid of all of his spades on dummy's clubs, making six-odd.

Mr. Abel should have done some thinking at trick one. His partner's club lead was an obvious singleton. If she had a quick trump winner, she would naturally want to know how she could reach Mr. Abel's hand so she could ruff a club return. With these thoughts in mind, Mr. Abel should have played the jack of clubs at trick one—unfortunately high card. This suit preference signal would tell Mrs. Keen that if and when she got in, she should return the higher of the other two plain all types, and build truck bodies.

A SOUND SPRING investment

is this basic blouse . . . simple, feminine and easy-to-care-for. In Avisee ribbed acetate, it washes easily, dries in a jiffy, and needs just a touch-up with the iron.

CHAMBER

The remaining two could still handle 10,000 tons.

Harry Breen suggested that whether or not the drydocks would be continued for district fish boats throughout the coming season, and was backed by Dr. L. M. Greene who said any sale or shut-down should be postponed at least until next fall for the sake of fishermen and to allow prospective buyers to investigate and prepare bids.

Urging immediate action on the proposed sale was a wire from E. T. (Ted) Applewhite, MP, who said he was awaiting more details on the sale proposal but meanwhile was fighting a one-man losing battle in Ottawa.

The session also heard a brief prepared by the Prince Rupert Industrial Development Committee in 1946, which outlined the potential of the drydock and urged the government and Canadian National Railways to make the drydock available by lease to private enterprise with the necessary capital to operate it.

The 1946 brief said there would be sufficient volume of work available in the area to maintain a staff of 125 employees for many months of the year.

It stressed that, with some minor changes in layout at minor cost, the plant could construct wooden vessels of 65 feet or more in length, undertake all types of ship repairs; overhaul and repair machinery and power units, either gas, diesel or steam; undertake metal casting and machining; construct tanks of all types, and build truck bodies.

Want a Pier?

LONDON (CP)—The government operated British Railways has a pier for sale. The structure which juts into the Thames here will be useless when improvements to the ferry service are completed.
