BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Sweeps on to Game
After a Tight Squeeze

Mr. Abel's hand was a no trump type. But he was quite right in his decision not to open the bidding with one no trump. His hand was too strong for that opening. There are many combinations Mr. Dale could hold which would not fulfill the requirements for a raise to two no trump, yet which would offer a fine play for game.

Wise, Mr. Abel preferred a one club opening. Over his partner's one heart response he then told his story with a jump to two no trump. This bid promises about half the deck in high cards—possibly a little less with good intermediate or a fairly solid five card suit.

Knowing this, Mr. Dale had no hesitation in going on to game. Mr. Champion led the queen of diamonds and Mr. Abel was on the verge of winning with the king when he paused to consider. His first quick estimate was that he could make five odd—three spades, three hearts, two diamonds and three clubs. He realized in time that this involved knocking out two enemy aces and that before he could accomplish this, the defenders would have their diamond suit set up.

If Mr. Champion had as many as five diamonds and both outstanding aces, Mr. Abel wasn't even going to take nine tricks. But if one of those aces was in Mrs. Keen's hand, the contract could be saved by proper play. Mr. Abel saw the play. He let the queen of diamonds hold. Diamonds were continued and he won with the king and started hearts. Mrs. Keen won the second round but had no diamond to return. She led a spade and Mr. Abel won with the ace. He now knocked out Mr. Champion's ace of clubs, won the diamond return with the ace and spread the hand for four-odd.

If he had taken the first trick, that would have left Mrs. Keen with a diamond which she undoubtedly would have led after winning with the ace of hearts. And in that case, Mr. Abel would have been down one, losing three diamonds and two aces.
