Canada Needs Stronger Laws to Curb Gangsters

The RCMP are concerned about the possible growth of gangsterism—organized crime—in Canada.

The national police force cites two factors for this anxiety:
● A United States anti-crime drive which may chase some big-time criminals across the border.

● Expansion of Canada's population, providing richer pickings for hoodlums.

The RCMP view is set out in a revised edition of its publication "Law and Order in Canadian Democracy," a 273-page book on crime and police work. Originally published in 1949, it now has been brought up to date.

Dealing with the sharpened crime problem caused by growth of population, the book says organized crime by its very nature must breed in thickly populated areas.

And, "in gangster parlance, 'the heat is on' across the border. To many of the harassed criminals in the U.S., our country, with its wealth and growth, must seem to offer new and safer fields for their rapacity."

"Much effort," the RCMP adds drily, "may be needed to convince them otherwise."

New and stronger laws may be required to curb crime in the face of the two developments.

"It may be," says the RCMP, "that additional safeguards will be needed against that unending search by criminals for the corrupt 'protection' without which they cannot operate for long as organizations."

But the effectiveness of any such measures, the book warns, will depend in the final analysis chiefly—if not wholly—on the public. The law cannot be changed any faster, or enforced any better, than the general community changes in its opinions and beliefs.

Canadians are inclined to be a little smug about the relatively small amount of gangster activity in this country, the RCMP observes. But any satisfaction should be tempered by the fact that this is only a matter of degree.

While the Canadian history of gangsterism is largely that of local organizations, the book says, every large city in the country has a serious problem in combating organized crime. It is still "a very active" problem in most cities.

Veteran Rupert Fisherman Laid to Rest

Funeral services were held Monday for Bjorgund T. Rvsstad, who died in Prince Rupert General Hospital last Friday, Rev. Olsen officiated.

Mr. Rvsstad was born in 1877 in Hylestad, Norway. After having done much travelling, he came to Canada in the early part of 1900. Later, he returned to Norway, where he married.

In 1926, he brought his family back to Canada and settled in Prince Rupert, where he was a fisherman for many years.

He leaves his daughter, Mrs. H. G. Roesch of Comox, and three sons, Torgier, Vancouver, Olav and Knut, both of Prince Rupert. A brother lives in Norway.

Pallbearers at the funeral, held from Grenville Chapel, were: Gunnar Hesland, Harold Child, J. D. Kerrighan, Alfred Benson, Earl Slatta and George Viereck.

Cancer Group Raises $600

SMITHERS.—Close to $600 has been raised by Smithers District Cancer Society in the recent fund drive for the fight against cancer.

Last-minute donations are expected to raise the amount over the $600 mark, said Mrs. N. C. Jackson, cancer drive chairman. The drive started in April and ended May 25.

Telkwa's committee under the chairmanship of Mrs. F. M. Dockerill raised $177.75.

Error Cost Dark Game to Dodgers

NEW YORK (CP)—Alvin Dark's error on a routine grounder with two out in the ninth inning gave Roy Campanella a chance to bat and the Brooklyn Dodgers' catcher clouted a three-run homer to give the Brooks a "gift" 5-3 victory over New York Giants Wednesday night.

It was Campanella's second homer of the game and that blow turned what looked like a sure win for pitcher Jim Hearn into a heartbreaking defeat. The Giants' hurler had pitched himself out of several jams in the late innings.
