Kesselring Tours Base With Pilots
 FUERSTENFELDBRUCK, Germany (AP)—Former German field marshal Albert Kesselring, together with about 200 top pilots in the old German Luftwaffe, toured the United States air force base here Sunday.
 The visit coincided with Communist charges in Berlin that the Americans are conspiring with Kesselring to build up a new aggressive German air force.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

 Partners Must Work Together On Defense

Here is an excellent example of imaginative play and partnership co-operation on the defense. Against the final contract of three no trump Mr. Masters opened the jack of clubs.

Mr. Dale surveyed the situation quickly. He had a pretty fair hand with two honors in the suit his partner had led and both majors bottled up. However, he realized this was not enough to beat the hand.

Discarding the idea of trying to do the job with his own cards, he elected to have a try at developing his partner's hand. His plan involved playing the queen of clubs on the first trick.

LAST CHANCE
 You can hardly blame Mr. Champion for winning with the king since as far as he knew this was his last chance to take a trick with that card. And, naturally enough, he started the diamonds at trick two, playing the king from his hand.

So far things had gone as Mr. Dale had hoped. They continued to go that way when Mr. Masters laid off the first diamond lead. When Mr. Champion then led his last diamond, Mr. Masters won with the ace and Mr. Dale, bringing his plan to its final fulfillment, discarded the ace of clubs.

With the clubs unblocked, Mr. Masters was able to run off 5 tricks in the suit to put the contract down 2.

To go back to trick one, Mr. Dale had seen that the club suit would be helplessly blocked if he made the "normal" play of the ace at trick one and returned the queen. Mr. Champion would simply hold up his king and let the queen win. A shift to some other suit would then be necessary and that would put the timing of the hand in Mr. Champion's favor.

The way the hand was actually played, it appeared to Mr. Champion that the ace of clubs was on his left. Therefore, to hold up his king at trick one would be to invite the defenders to win at least four clubs and the ace of diamonds, whereas to win with the king of clubs would make the contract if the opposing clubs were divided four and four.
