DO YOU know what a blind classified ad is? A blind ad doesn't carry the advertiser's name or address; it just gives a telephone or box number. If there's any reason to keep your name confidential, or if it's more convenient to pick up replies from a box, why don't you run a blind ad. Just phone 748 and see your ad in the paper tomorrow. BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Simple Play Defeats No-Trump Bid

Mrs. Keen made a play to defeat today's three no trump contract and while the play is simple in nature, it is often overlooked.

She opened her fourth highest spade, the four, and Mr. Dale won with the king. He returned the eight of spades and Mr. Champion put up the ten spot.

Here Mrs. Keen paused to check up. There is a specific convention relating to returning the suit partner had opened. Holding four or more cards in that suit, you return the fourth highest.

Holding three, you return the highest. There are a few exceptions to this procedure but this hand is not one of them.

It was obvious to Mrs. Keen that Mr. Dale's eight of spades was not a fourth highest. Mr. Dale might have started with the K-eight doubleton. But that would give Mr. Champion a five card spade suit and he had consistently turned down the opportunity of bidding spades throughout the auction.

It was almost certain, then, that Mr. Dale had started with exactly three spades. Mrs. Keen could win the second trick with the jack, cash the ace and lead a fourth spade to clear the suit. That would leave her with a good spade. But how would she ever get in to cash it?

Clearly, she could not do so. Therefore, it was necessary to concede Mr. Champion the second trick and hope Mr. Dale had another entry. This would leave a spade in Mr. Dale's hand for a fatal lead through Mr. Champion's queen.

Mr. Champion did the best he could, leading a diamond at trick three and going up with the ace in dummy, hoping to drop a singleton king. That is, he could afford to lose a diamond trick to Mrs. Keen and still win nine tricks.

But the king did not drop and Mr. Dale won the second diamond and fired his last spade, the deuce. Three more spade winners completed the set for a fatal lead through Mr. Champion's queen.
